INTRODUCTION

0.1 The national legal system

Explain briefly the key aspects of the national legal system that are essential to understanding the legal framework on discrimination. For example, in federal systems, it would be necessary to outline how legal competence for anti-discrimination law is distributed among different levels of government.

Greece is a parliamentary republic.⁴ Popular sovereignty is the foundation of government, whereas all powers derive from the People and exist for the People and the Nation.²

Pursuant to the relevant constitutional provisions,³ the main legislative bodies in the Greek legal system are: the Parliament (η Βουλή των Ελλήνων), the President of the Republic (ο Πρόεδρος της Δημοκρατίας) acting on a governmental proposal, the Government (η Κυβέρνηση), the social partners (οι Κοινωνικοί Εταίροι) (entitled to conclude collective labour agreements in employment matters), and (in specific matters) the bodies known as ‘Independent Authorities’ (Ανεξάρτητες Αρχές). According to the Greek Constitution, legislative powers are exercised jointly by the Parliament and the President of the Republic.

The right to introduce bills (Νομοθετική Πρωτοβουλία [right of initiative]) belongs to the Parliament and the Government.⁴

The provisions of law emanating from the legislative process exist in the form of a hierarchy. The Constitution forms the basis of the legal system and all secondary legislation must be in compliance with it. Legislative acts are either substantive or formal, depending on whether one examines their content or their form. Substantive law defines the requirements for the creation of a legal relation or situation. Of course, both kinds of law, substantive and formal, should be in conformity with the Constitution and are actually examined ex officio by the Greek courts, namely for their compliance with the Constitution. Substantive statutes emanate not only from Parliament but also from other authorities, especially from the President of the Republic in the form of decrees, and from cabinet ministers in the form of decisions taken by virtue of authorisation by Parliament.

² Constitution, Article 1(2), 1(3).
⁴ Constitution, Article 73(1). Individual Members of Parliament have the right to introduce a bill, but this occurs only rarely.
Only substantive statutes may constitute sources of law, in the sense that they form a legal relation or situation, and only their violation is subject to review by the Supreme Court on final appeal (Article 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure).

The Greek Constitution declares in Article 28 that the ‘generally recognised’ rules of international law as well as international conventions constitute an integral part of Greek law which come into force as of the time they are ratified by statute in Greece, and that they prevail over any contrary statutory provisions. However, the rules of international law and international conventions shall be applied to aliens only on the condition of reciprocity. Moreover, as a result of Greek accession to the European Communities, EU law has become part of the legal system. Beside the rules of primary sources of EU law, which prevail over domestic law, secondary EU legislation, especially regulations, is directly applicable in Greece.

The Parliament

Every bill (Νομοσχέδιο), accompanied by an explanatory report (εισηγητική έκθεση), is introduced for debate and if accepted (passed) by Parliament, the President of the Republic then promulgates and publishes it as a law (Νόμος) (or act of Parliament).

The explanatory reports and the minutes of parliamentary debates are quite often referred to as a valuable aid for the interpretation and application of laws.

Prior to their introduction to the Parliament, bills are in most cases referred to a Scientific Research Service to the Parliament (επιστημονική υπηρεσία της Βουλής), which is established under the Constitution to assist Parliament in its legislative work.

Moreover, bills of major importance in the area of industrial relations, social security and the Government’s overall economic and social policy, are referred to a special Economic and Social Committee, which gives non-binding comprehensive opinions on the content of such bills.

5 Constitution, Article 74.
6 Statutes are then published in the Official Gazette.
7 Constitution, Article 65(5).
8 Constitution, Article 82(3): ‘Matters relating to the establishment, operation and competences of the Economic and Social Committee, the mission of which is the conduct of social dialogue for the overall policy of the Country and especially for the orientations of the economic and social policy, as well as the formulation of opinions on Bills and law proposals referred to it, shall be specified by law.’ The law in force is Law 2232/1994. (It was enacted prior to the 2001 Constitutional Revision, but the new Constitution recognised and upgraded the Committee’s competences).
The President of the Republic acting on the proposal of a Minister

The President promulgates and publishes the statutes and issues the decrees necessary for their execution.9

If specially delegated by a statute and upon the motion of the competent minister,10 the President can issue general regulatory decrees (κανονιστικά διατάγματα).11

These decrees (‘presidential decrees’, as they are termed in practice) have the force of a statute.12 The President may only issue decrees containing legal rules on the basis of (a) a statutory (specific) delegation, which must state its subject, aim and limits, or (b) a (newly introduced) framework law.

Delegation is permitted except where the Constitution requires a ‘formal law’, that is to say an act of parliament, instead of a ‘law’, which may also be any statutory instrument. The President has to sign a decree, whether he agrees or disagrees with it, provided that it is based on specific statutory delegation and issued on a ministerial proposal. The Government uses this ‘delegated presidential competence’ quite often, as they can pass new legislation in a speedier and simpler way compared to the passing of a statute by Parliament, which involves complex procedures and debates.13

The Government

All ministers have the right to issue regulatory acts (usually termed ministerial decisions (υπουργικές αποφάσεις)) by virtue of a statutory delegation in cases concerning regulation of specific matters or matters of local interest or of a technical and detailed nature.14

Ministers, including the Employment and Social Affairs Ministers,15 make wide use of this right. These ministerial decisions are legally binding.

9 Constitution, Article 42.
10 ‘No act of the President shall be valid nor be executed unless countersigned by the competent Minister …’ (Constitution, Article 35).
11 Constitution, Article 43(2).
12 Prior to their entry into force all decrees of a regulatory nature must be elaborated by the Supreme Administrative Court [Συμβούλιο της Επικρατείας]. Constitution, Article 95(1)(d).
13 International conventions require ratification by a statutory act of Parliament, as foreseen in Article 28(1) of the Constitution.
14 Constitution, Article 43(2).
15 The Labour Department is now (since March 2004) called the Ministry for Employment and Social Solidarity.
The Social Partners

Specific employment matters, to a certain extent social security matters, and general employment standards are widely regulated autonomously by collective labour agreements (CLAs), concluded by trade unions and employers’ organisations (or individual major employers). The social partners act at national level (nationwide CLAs bind all employers and workers, regardless of whether they are unionised or not), at branch level (e.g. in the banking sector), at occupational level (e.g. accountants) and at company level.

The Independent Authority for the Protection of Personal Data

Pursuant to Article 9A of the Constitution, all persons have the right to be protected from the collection, processing and use of their personal data, as specified by law (currently Law 2472/1997). This protection is ensured by an independent authority, the Hellenic Data Protection Authority (Αρχή Προστασίας Δεδομένων Προσωπικού Χαρακτήρα), which is established and operates under the said Law 2472/1997. This authority, as delegated by the law, is entitled to issue regulative acts on special and technical matters related to the protection of personal data.

The Law Enforcement Bodies

Under the Constitution, the courts enforce the law and nobody can be deprived against his will of the judge assigned to him by law.

Judicial committees or extraordinary courts, under any name whatsoever, cannot be constituted. Therefore, as a matter of principle, law enforcement bodies other than courts may not be established.

In the Greek legal system, the courts are entrusted with protecting constitutional provisions in the sense that they are in no case obliged to comply with provisions, whose content – as assessed by the judge — infringes the Constitution.

However, in respect of employment issues, three public authorities play a considerable part in the law enforcement environment.

16 Constitution, Article 22(2) and Law 1876/1990 on free collective bargaining.
17 Pursuant to Article 101A of the Constitution, members of the independent authorities shall enjoy personal and operational independence.
18 Constitution, Article 87(1): ‘Justice shall be administered by courts composed of regular judges who shall enjoy functional and personal independence.’
19 Constitution, Article 8(1).
20 Constitution, Article 87(2).
21 In gender discrimination issues, there is a quasi-enforcement body, the Secretariat of Equality (Γραμματεία Ισότητας), operating under the direct control of the Prime Minister.
The Labour Inspectorate (Επιθεώρηση Εργασίας) (a central service to the Ministry of Employment and a monitoring body) performs inspection and control at workplaces to ensure the proper implementation of legislation, with powers to institute criminal proceedings or in some cases impose fines against employers. However, its resources are very limited and its staff are mostly poorly trained and lack expertise.

A recently established service, the Ombudsman (ο Συνήγορος του Πολίτη), which is an independent authority operating under Article 103 of the Constitution and Law 2477/1997, has proved to be much more effective. Since 1997 (when the law reached the Statute Book), citizens have invoked the Ombudsman in hundreds of cases; in many of these cases, he has compelled state agencies to respect citizens’ rights.

Under the anti-discrimination law, the Ombudsman is competent in regard to the promotion of children’s rights, as well as the implementation of the principle of equal treatment, regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, age, disability or sexual orientation, in the public sector, drafting reports and investigating complaints on violations of this principle (in any field; not only in occupation and employment). (For more details concerning the task of the Greek Ombudsman you can see the chapter 7b below).

In most of its annual Special Reports for the implementation of equal treatment legislation that the Greek Ombudsman publishes within its mandate, after 2006, it points out the limited coverage of anti-discrimination law and the general lack of awareness against discrimination within Greek society and public administration. The Ombudsman’s Reports usually repeat the necessity to amend the relevant legislation in order to extend the field of protection of Law 3304/2005 so as to cover all grounds of discrimination.

As it is cited in several of the Reports, most of the complaints for racial discrimination in housing that the Ombudsman usually examines concern Roma cases whereas complaints for discrimination in the field of employment and education / vocational training concerned mostly the grounds of age, disability and sexual orientation. The Reports conclude, among others, that every year the general number of anti-discrimination complaints is slightly higher than this of the previous one, however it is still low, without this meaning real absence of discrimination in Greece. Also, the number of complaints of discrimination on the grounds of disability has risen, mainly due to the submission of complaints to the Ombudsman by disability organisations, this showing the important role that civil society can play.

Finally, it should be highlighted that the current situation in Greece does not allow for further developments in the field of anti-discrimination law, since most of the new legislation concerns - almost exclusively - economic issues. On the other hand, although the topic of migration remains at the top of the social, legal and political agenda, no one seems to deal with its special dimension of “discrimination”.
0.2 Overview/State of implementation

List below the points where national law is in breach of the Directives or whether there are gaps in the transposition/implementation process, including issues where uncertainty remains and/or judicial interpretation is required. This paragraph should provide a concise summary, which may take the form of a bullet point list. Further explanation of the reasons supporting your analysis can be provided later in the report.

This section is also an opportunity to raise any important considerations regarding the implementation and enforcement of the Directives that have not been mentioned elsewhere in the report. This could also be used to give an overview of the way (if at all) national law has given rise to complaints or changes, including possibly a reference to the number of complaints, whether instances of indirect discrimination have been found by judges, and if so, for which grounds, etc.

Please bear in mind that this report is focused on issues closely related to the implementation of the Directives. General information on discrimination in the domestic society (such as immigration law issues) are not appropriate for inclusion in this report.

Please ensure that you review the existing text and remove items where national law has changed and is no longer in breach.

Regarding the implementation of Directives 2000/78/EC and 2000/43/EC, the Greek Parliament passed anti-discrimination legislation, Law 3304/2005, which literally transposes these two Directives into Greek national law. This law fills a conspicuous lacuna in the Greek legal system, where there was previously no specific anti-discrimination legislation in force. This new statute, entitled ‘On the application of the principle of equal treatment regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, disability, age, or sexual orientation’, protects all persons in both the public and private sectors, and covers the fields of access to employment and occupation (but not to self-employment), vocational training and education, social protection, including social security and healthcare, education, and access to goods and services including housing.

Concerning the points where Greek national law is in breach of the Directives, it must be noted that Article 28 of the anti-discrimination law (Law 3304/2005) implementing these Directives specifically states:

On entry into force, this Law repeals any legislation or rule and abrogates any clause included in personal or collective contracts, general dealing terms, internal enterprise regulations, charters of profit or non-profit organisations, independent professional associations and employee or employer trade unions opposed to the equal treatment principle defined in this Law.
In addition, Law 3304/2005 commences with the ‘purpose’ of the legislation, which is modelled on Article 1 of both Directives:

The purpose of this Law is to lay down a general regulatory framework for combating discrimination on the grounds of racial or ethnic origin, as well as combating discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation as regards employment and occupation, in accordance with the Council Directives 2000/43/EC and 2000/78/EC, with a view to putting into effect the principle of equal treatment.

It is evident that the Greek legislature did not intend to provide specific regulations with regard to the implementation of the principle of equal treatment, but a general framework. This is not within the spirit of the Directive, which establishes the general framework for the member states to make specific regulations and take concrete implementation measures.

In regard to the equality bodies established by Law 3304/2005, it is important to note that, after a reasoned opinion on unsatisfactory transposition (in 2007), the European Commission finally closed procedures against Greece in 2008.\(^{22}\)

Also included in national law are exceptions relating to employment in the police, prison or emergency services, under the condition of relevance to service. Article 8(4) of Law 3304/2005 provides that:

> “The provisions of this chapter [Note: Equal treatment in employment and occupation], in so far as it relates to different treatment on the grounds of age or disability, relevant to service, shall not apply to the armed forces and the security bodies” (consequently also to the police, prison or emergency services, e.g. fire department).

There are no relevant Greek provisions or concepts or case-law in regard to discrimination based on perceptions or assumption of what a person is (see 2.1.2.a. below). The Greek non-discrimination law does not prohibit direct discrimination and harassment by association as required by the CJEU judgment in Coleman (Case C-303/06),

Lastly, contract work, self-employment, military service and holding statutory office are not covered.

There are no other issues where uncertainty remains and/or judicial interpretation is required.

0.3 Case-law

Provide a list of any important case-law in 2013 within the national legal system relating to the application and interpretation of the Directives. (The older case-law mentioned in the previous report should be moved to Annex 3). Please ensure a follow-up of previous cases if these are going to higher courts. This should take the following format:

Name of the court
Date of decision
Name of the parties
Reference number (or place where the case is reported).
Address of the webpage (if the decision is available electronically)
Brief summary of the key points of law and of the actual facts (no more than several sentences).

Please use this section not only to update, complete or develop last year's report, but also to include information on important and relevant case law falling under both anti-discrimination Directives (Please note that you may include case-law going beyond discrimination in the employment field for grounds other than racial and ethnic origin)

Please describe trends and patterns in cases brought by Roma and Travellers, and provide figures – if available.

Case law of European Court of Human Rights

Brief summary: On 28 May 2013, the European Court of Human Rights in a unanimous decision concluded that the education of Roma children who were restricted to primary school in which the only pupils were other Roma children, resulted in a violation of Article 14 of the European Convention for Human Rights (prohibition of discrimination) in conjunction with Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 (right to education). In specific, the European Court found that the continuing nature of the particular situation and the State’s refusal to take anti-segregation measures implied discrimination and a breach of the right to education.

Name of the court: European Court of Human Rights
Date of decision: 3 October 2013
Name of the parties: I.B. v. Greece
Reference number: 552/10
Address of the webpage: http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng/pages/search.aspx#{%22itemid%22:[%22002-9195%22]}

Brief summary: In a judgment in the case “I.B. v. Greece”, the European Court of Human Rights concluded that the dismissal of a worker with HIV violated his right to private life (art. 8 ECHR) in conjunction with the prohibition of discrimination (art. 14 ECHR). In February 2005, while he was on annual leave, the applicant learned that he had contracted the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). This news spread throughout the company in which he was employed. Members of staff began to complain to the employer about having to work with a person who was HIV-positive and called for his dismissal. The applicant’s employer then invited an occupational doctor to visit the workplace to explain the HIV infection, and its means of transmission, to the staff. The doctor tried to reassure the employees and explained what precautions should be taken. Nonetheless, about half of the staff sent a letter to the applicant’s employer, calling for his dismissal in order to “preserve their health and their right to work”, and stating that the harmonious atmosphere which reigned in the company was likely to deteriorate if he remained. Two days before the applicant’s return from leave, the employer dismissed him, while paying the allowance provided for under Greek law. The applicant applied to the courts. Overturning the judgment of the court of appeal, the Court of Cassation held that the applicant had not been unfairly dismissed. The EctHR ruled that the Greek Court of Cassation had not provided an adequate explanation as to how the employer’s interests outweighed those of the applicant, and had failed to weigh up the rights of the two parties in a manner consistent with the Convention. This ruling is notable for the strong message the Court sends about the harms of HIV-based stigma and discrimination in the field of employment.

Date of decision: 7 November 2013
Name of the parties: Vallianatos and Mylonas v. Greece" and "C.S. and others vs Greece"
Reference number: Applications no. 29381/09 ανδ 32684/09
Address of the webpage: http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/fra/pages/search.aspx?i=001-128294#{%22itemid%22:[%220001-128294%22]}

Brief summary: In a judgment in the joint cases of "Vallianatos and Mylonas v. Greece" and "C.S. and others vs Greece", the Grand Chamber of the European Court of Human Rights ruled that Greece had violated Article 14 combined with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights by excluding same-sex couples from a “civil union”, restricted in Greece to heterosexual couples. In its decision, the Court ruled that Greece had failed to provide a convincing justification for excluding same-sex couples. The Government’s argument, according to which the law’s main purpose was to protect children of unmarried parents, did not constitute a valid reason, because the law’s real objective was the legal recognition of a new form of family life. Therefore, exclusion of same-sex couples breaches the Convention. In November 2008, Greece had adopted a law creating the “civil unions”,... an alternative to marriage. However, the first article restricts such unions to “two physical individuals of different sex who have reached the age of majority”. This was the third ECHR ruling on discrimination against Roma pupils in Greek schools, Twice before – in rulings in the cases of “Sampanis and others v. Greece”\(^{23}\) on 5th June 2008 (application no. 32526/05) and “Sampani and others v. Greece”\(^{24}\) on 11th December 2012 ((application no. 59608/09) – the Court has censured the Greek authorities for allowing discrimination against Roma pupils in a school in Aspropirgos, a western suburb of Athens. The Court noted that since its previous judgments, the situation of Roma, who are discriminated in their access to education, did not change in Greece: the Roma children are still victim of school segregation and they are put into special classes or schools with only Roma children and where the level of instruction is lower than in other schools of the country. Moreover, the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child has expressed concerns about the limited access to education and school segregation experienced by Roma pupils in Greece, and Greek civil society organisations have documented several cases of persistent segregation and exclusion of Roma pupils in different parts of the country.

Brief summary: The Greek Supreme Court has annulled the last will and testament of a deceased Greek Muslim man, which was made in accordance with the Greek civil code, as it was not compliant with sharia law. The case regards a Muslim man who lived in Thrace. This man had prepared his will in accordance with Greek civil law, leaving all his assets to his wife. The will was challenged by the deceased man’s sister who claimed a share of his assets, claiming that the Islamic law of succession does not recognize the right of a Muslim to make a public will. The legal basis of this overruling was the Law 147/1914 (art. 4), which stipulates that all the issues regarding marriage and personal relations between spouses and other family members are settled according to the Holly Islamic Law (Sharia). The decision overturns the rights of Greek minority Muslims in Thrace to prepare wills under Greek civil law. The Muslim minority of Thrace have had the right to draw up civil wills under Greek law since 1946. This precedent may affect the whole traditional judicial practice in Greece and, thus, relatives of Muslims will probably be able to dispute the official order of distribution of fortunes.

Equality body decision

Name of the body: Greek Ombudsman
Date of decision: 28 February 2013
Name of the parties: Unrevealed
Reference number: 178986/2013
Address of the webpage: http://www.synigoros.gr/resources/synopsidiamesolavisis-teliko--2.pdf

Brief summary: The Ombudsman examined a report of a person with intellectual disability (Down ‘s Syndrom), concerning the refusal of his registration in a Vocational Training Institute (IEK). The person referred, having attended mainstream school during primary and secondary education, has followed the prescribed procedure for admission to postsecondary education. However, despite the fact that he had been named as a successful candidate for a place in an IEK, he was informed that his attendance was impossible due to the lack of provision of special education by the unit of vocational training in the field of tourism. After investigating the facts of the case and the relevant legal framework, the Ombudsman has addressed a document to the competent directorate of the Ministry of Tourism and the managing authority of the IEK, expressing the opinion that the refusal of registration of said person in the vocational unit constitutes a discrimination in the field of education and vocational training on grounds of disability. Moreover, the Ombudsman highlighted that based on the principle of equality and non discrimination, the concerned person’s registration in this specific structure of vocational training is required as well as taking measures that would allow his smooth integration and attendance. In addition, the Ombudsman recommended that, in case of an objective non capacity of the body to proceed, as required under the law, to the necessary reasonable adjustments, it should accept what the student’s judicial supporter suggested, i.e. the student’s brother accompanying him. The competent directorate of the Ministry of Tourism, despite reservations expressed in a responding document regarding the capacity of responsiveness of the aforementioned vocational unit to special adjustments needed, has accepted the views of the Ombudsman. Nevertheless, the IEK invoked the passing of an adequate period of time since the beginning of courses and suggested his registration occurring in the next academic year. Following this development and after the appeal of the person concerned to the competent administrative court, an urgent court order was issued, forcing the IEK to allow the student’s attendance during the current academic year. The Ombudsman sent all the documents of the case to the person concerned, so as they would be utilized in the appeal procedure, and interrupted the mediatory intervention at the stage of judicial pendency. Finally, the Ombudsman pointed out that the financial and psychological burdens of the person concerned and his family would have been avoided, if the recommendations of the Authority had been fully accepted from the outset. This fact would have contributed to limiting judicial material as well as related budgetary expenditure respectively. The case is now pending for appeal.

Trends and patterns on Roma issues: Ethnic profiling constitutes also a factor that has a direct or indirect impact on equal access to housing. The Human Rights Commissioner, in his 2013 report on Greece, had “urged the authorities to put an end to the practice of ethnic profiling by the police, reportedly widely used concerning Roma (and migrants as part of the ‘Xenios Zeus’ police operation under which the legal status of migrants is verified). Racial profiling is discriminatory and seriously undermines confidence in the police among the social groups targeted. Drawing on ECRI’s General Policy Recommendation N° 11 on combating racism and racial discrimination in policing, the authorities are invited to introduce in the law enforcement rules a “reasonable suspicion standard”, whereby powers relating to control, surveillance or investigation activities can only be exercised on the basis of a suspicion that is founded on objective criteria.”

Answering parliamentary questions tabled by an opposition MP on 27 September 2013 and 29 October 2013, the Minister of Public Order informed Parliament on 18 October and 23 November 2013 that in 2013 police had made 1131 operations in Roma settlements, almost always at around 5am to 6am, where they had checked 52,431 Roma (Greece’s Roma population is estimated at 350,000 persons), taken in 19,067 Roma and arrested just 1,305 Roma, with only about half of them (ca. 650) for serious crimes (drugs, thefts, guns etc.).

There are no figures regarding the number of percentage of Greek Roma and non Greek Roma. So, less than 7% of the Roma taken to police stations (where they usually spend several hours losing a day’s income) end up being arrested! At the same time, police issued hundreds of statements naming each and every time the Roma ethnic identity, even they are Greek Roma and even though this is not registered in the identity cards, in a deliberate effort to show that there is Roma criminality which is combated by police. The reference to ethnic identity of Greek citizens is in violation of the Greek data protection legislation. Similar data are available about mass controls of foreigners in the streets and taking in police stations of tens of thousands to arrest only about 7% of them mostly for being irregular migrants.

Furthermore, the convictions and findings of the European Committee of Social Rights related to the housing conditions of Roma concerning Greece, leave no room for complacency. The problem of municipal registration of many Greek Roma is also relevant as it manifests with particular intensity in the case of housing recovery. The National Commission of Human Rights, in its remarks, highlighted that, as stated in a special report by the Ombudsman, having access to a housing loan depends on the existence of municipal registration and proof of permanent residence, which becomes an inherent systemic contradiction and excludes of government support exactly those who need it the most.\footnote{Ombudsman, \textit{Special Report for the municipal registration of Greek Roma}, August 2009.} In the same direction, the large number of Roma children who are not registered at birth, is still a cause for concern, as it is moreover noted by the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child,\footnote{Committee on the Rights of the Child, \textit{Concluding Observations: Greece}, RC/C/GRC/CO/2-3 (13.08.2012).} in its recent concluding observations on Greece.

1 GENERAL LEGAL FRAMEWORK

Constitutional provisions on protection against discrimination and the promotion of equality

a) Briefly specify the grounds covered (explicitly and implicitly) and the material scope of the relevant provisions. Do they apply to all areas covered by the Directives? Are they broader than the material scope of the Directives?

The Constitution has always contained a general provision requiring equality for all Greeks before the law (Article 4(1)). In 1975, a new Constitution came into force, an important feature of which was the strengthening of human rights. On that occasion, a specific gender equality provision was introduced into the Constitution, as a result of a big campaign by women’s NGOs. The provision states: ‘Greek men and women have equal rights and obligations’ (Article 4(2)).

In the area of constitutional provisions, in its first part the Greek Constitution assigns to the State the primary obligation to respect and protect the value of the human being. The Greek Constitution also contains a specific and general non-discrimination provision that explicitly protects all people, national citizens and aliens, men and women, old and young. In specific, Article 5, par. 1. stipulates: “All persons shall have the right to develop freely their personality and to participate in the social, economic and political life of the country, insofar as they do not infringe the rights of others or violate the Constitution and the good usages.2. All persons living within the Greek territory shall enjoy full protection of their life, honour and liberty irrespective of nationality, race or language and of religious or political beliefs. Exceptions shall be permitted only in cases provided by international law.”

Therefore, we could mention the principles of human dignity and free development of personality, the principle of general equality, the right to protection of health, the freedom of religion, the freedom of opinion and of the press; the freedom of art, science, research and teaching; the right to judicial protection; the right to be protected against misuse of personal data; the right to receive free education on all levels at state educational institutions; the right to a family, the protection of marriage, motherhood, childhood, families with many children, the right to work and to receive equal pay for work of equal value, the right for respect of human and social rights; and the right to enjoy affirmative measures to counterbalance real inequality.

All these rights and principles conceptually cover all anti-discrimination grounds and material fields mentioned in Directives 2000/43 and 2000/78. Theoretically, therefore, nothing would stand in the way of victims of discrimination, regardless of their racial or national origin, religious or other beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation, invoking these provisions and attempting to initiate a discussion towards promoting social integration and inclusion and combating discrimination. It is obvious that as general principles such constitutional provisions cover every aspect of human life and personal development, and as such they offer a resource for people who are not protected under other provisions of national law. However, it would be extremely difficult to derive specific enforceable rights from these general clauses, given that such general clauses are no substitute for more specific legislation which adds clarity and enforceability to the rights of persons.

b) Are constitutional anti-discrimination provisions directly applicable?

Article 5 of the Constitution is considered as the constitutional basis of all Greek non-discrimination law.

Unfortunately, despite the efforts of gay activists, ‘sexual orientation’ was not included in Article 5(2) during the constitutional amendment of 2001, when Article 5(2) remained unchanged. Nevertheless, it has been argued that these general provisions (the combination of paragraphs 1 and 2) may be used in cases of sexual orientation discrimination, i.e. discrimination on grounds of a person's refusal to answer, or answering inaccurately, a question about his/her sexual orientation. The Greek Ombudsman usually accepts them, but this is not the case as far as courts are concerned.

c) In particular, where a constitutional equality clause exists, can it (also) be enforced against private actors (as opposed to the State)?

Article 25 of the Constitution is of great importance:

1. The rights of man as an individual and as a member of the society and the principle of the constitutional welfare state are guaranteed by the State. All agents of the State shall be obliged to ensure the unhindered and effective exercise thereof. These principles also apply to relations between the private individuals to which they pertain. Restrictions of any kind which, according to the Constitution, may be imposed upon these rights should be provided either directly by the Constitution or by the law, in case a reservation exists in the latter’s favour, and should respect the principle of proportionality.

2. The recognition and protection of the fundamental and inalienable rights of man by the State aims at the achievement of social progress in freedom and justice.

3. The abusive exercise of rights is not permitted.

4. The State has the right to claim of all citizens to fulfil the duty of social and national solidarity.

Article 25 of Greek Constitution is immensely important because it clearly indicates that private employers must also respect the constitutional rights of their employees (e.g. the rights of equality and non-discrimination). It was added during the last constitutional amendment of 2001 and it should be used against the previously predominant doctrine that constitutional provisions protect citizens against unequal treatment or discrimination by state entities only and not by employers in the private sector.
2 THE DEFINITION OF DISCRIMINATION

2.1 Grounds of unlawful discrimination

Which grounds of discrimination are explicitly prohibited in national law? All grounds covered by national law should be listed, including those not covered by the Directives.

The explicitly prohibited grounds of discrimination in the anti-discrimination legislation, Law 3304/2005, are race, ethnic origin, language, religion, political or other beliefs, sex, disability, age and sexual orientation.

2.1.1 Definition of the grounds of unlawful discrimination within the Directives

a) How does national law on discrimination define the following terms: (the expert can provide first a general explanation under a) and then has to provide an answer for each ground)

i) racial or ethnic origin,

Law 3304/2005 lacks any specific definition of anti-discrimination grounds such as racial or ethnic origin.

According to the Act 474/1990 (Art. 1, par.1), which ratified ICERD “racial discrimination means any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.”

ii) religion or belief,

Law 3304/2005 lacks any specific definition of anti-discrimination grounds such as religion or belief.

iii) disability. Is there a definition of disability at the national level and how does it compare with the concept adopted by the Court of Justice of the European Union in Joined Cases C-335/11 and C-337/11 Skouboe Werge and Ring, Paragraph 38, according to which the concept of ‘disability’ must be understood as: “a limitation which results in particular from physical, mental or psychological impairments which in interaction with various barriers may hinder the full and effective participation of the person concerned in professional life on an equal basis with other workers” (based on Article 1 UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities)?
Law 3304/2005 lacks any specific definition of anti-discrimination grounds such as disability.

However, after the adoption of the Law 4074 /2012 (see below - Chapter 2.6a) by the Greek Parliament (on 11 April 2012), the definition43 of disability that is included in the U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities can be regarded as officially transposed in the Greek legal order.

In that indirect way, the definition can be regarded as compatible with the concept adopted by the Court of Justice of the European Union in Joined Cases C-335/11 and C-337/11 Skouboe Werge and Ring, Paragraph 38.

As far as the ground of disability is concerned, on 27 January 2011 the National Commission of Human Rights (NCHR) issued a consultative / non binding Opinion on issues of protection of rights of persons who have AIDS / HIV. Discrimination on the ground of disability was one of the issues that had been examined, discussed and finally included in the Opinion of the NCHR. The Opinion analyses thoroughly all issues concerning the existence of extreme prejudice against persons who have AIDS / HIV. The Commission admits that sickness from AIDS /HIV is not explicitly regarded as a ground of discrimination in any international or European legal text, and that the Greek Law 3304/2005 on discrimination does not refer to this specific condition. However, it points out that , according to Resolutions of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, the term “condition”, to which several legal conventions refer, should be interpreted in a way that it could include the health condition of a person (and therefore its condition as an AIDS / HIV patient). Furthermore, the U.N. Commission on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has already interpreted the term “other condition”, that is included in the Article 2 of the Covenant, as related to a person ’s situation of health, and uses sickness from AIDS /HIV as an example.

According to the NCHR, since the notion of “disability” is not explicitly and clearly described in the Greek legal framework, it is legally possible to interprete this term in a broad way that could include “sickness from AIDS /HIV” as well. This form of interpretation could be based on the Article 111 of the Convention of I.L.O. (International Labour Organisation), according to which the legal protection of the Convention could be extended to “any other discrimination , exclusion or preference resulting in abolition or differentiation of equality of chances and treatment in the field of employment”. Furthermore, the NCHR refers to the International Recommendation on Labour No 200/2010 regarding AIDS /HIV, which also emphasises that according to Article 111 of I.L.O Convention the interpretation of the term “discrimination” should be broad. The above Recommendation clearly mentions that “real or possible 43 “Persons with disabilities include those who have long-term physical, mental, intellectual or sensory impairments which in interaction with various barriers may hinder their full and effective participation in society on an equal basis with others” ( U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, Art.1, par.2).

sickness from AIDS /HIV cannot constitute a reasonable basis for discrimination that would deter such real or possible patients from being hired or continuing their working life”. According to this specific Opinion approved by the NCHR on 27.01.2011, the definition of “disability” as described in the text of the U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (Article 1, par.2) includes “all diseases of long duration of time”. However, this conclusion is not in line with the CRPD/Art. 1 (2). Finally, the NCHR highlights the Ministerial Decision Φ21/2361 (ΦΕΚ Β’ 819/1993) strictly stipulating that AIDS/HIV patients fall within the category of disabled persons.

The above Opinion of the NCHR is quite important, because it raised for the first time in Greece the issue of discrimination against AIDS / HIV patients by substantiating with legal arguments its subjection into the category of “discrimination on ground of disability”. Its suggestion for an inclusion of AIDS / HIV cases in the notion of “disability” is clear, concrete and constructive and ensures the protection of AIDS/HIV patients that could become victims of possible discrimination.

In a judgment in the case “I.B. v. Greece” (reference number :552/10) issued on 3rd October 2013, the European Court of Human Rights concluded that the dismissal of a worker with HIV violated his right to private life (art. 8 ECHR) in conjunction with the prohibition of discrimination (art. 14 ECHR). The EctHR ruled that the Greek Court of Cassation had not provided an adequate explanation as to how the employer’s interests outweighed those of the applicant, and had failed to weigh up the rights of the two parties in a manner consistent with the Convention.

iv) age,

Law 3304/2005 lacks any specific definition of anti-discrimination grounds such as racial or age

v) sexual orientation?

Law 3304/2005 lacks any specific definition of anti-discrimination grounds such as sexual orientation.

In sum, definitions of racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, age, disability or sexual orientation are lacking in Greek legislation in general.

b) Where national law on discrimination does not define these grounds, how far have equivalent terms been used and interpreted elsewhere in national law? Is recital 17 of Directive 2000/78/EC reflected in the national anti-discrimination legislation?

44 “Matters of protection of rights of persons who have AIDS” (Opinion of NCHR issued on 27.01.2011).
Recital 17 of Directive 2000/78/EC is not reflected in the national legislation against discrimination.

i) racial or ethnic origin

Equivalent terms have not been used.

There has not been any case-law giving a definition of racial or ethnic origin.

However, according to decisions of the Supreme Administrative Court, namely 957/2003, 3057/1999, 3832/1992 and 3603/1991, the term ‘racial or ethnic origin’ could be considered as being interpreted, as the Court made reference to relevant applicable law, e.g. the Civil Law TA/1856 or Law 4310/1929, and in particular Law 2910/2001 on the entry and residence of aliens in Greece. It seems that the Court interpreted the term ‘racial or ethnic origin’ on the basis of nationality and citizenship, without clarifying definitions of these.

As regards the status of aliens, an alien is entitled to the same rights as a national under the applicable law, pursuant to the Greek choice of law rules. Many bilateral treaties entered into by Greece also call for national or most favoured nation treatment of aliens.

It is characteristic that Roma who live in the north-east of Greece are regarded only as a part of the Muslim community. In contrast, Roma who live in the rest of the country are not regarded as a distinct racial or ethnic group but only as a vulnerable social group.

ii) religion or belief (e.g. the interpretation of what is a ‘religion’ for the purposes of freedom of religion, or what is a “disability” sometimes defined only in social security legislation)?

The terms “religion or belief” have been quasi-defined in some cases, as for example in Article 13 of the Greek Constitution, which reads, ‘All known religions shall be free’. There is no specific definition of religion either in the Greek Constitution or in other sources of the Greek legal order. Greek legal scholars argue that the Greek Constitution only protects publicly known religions but not mystical and secret practices or dogmas.

45 The most publicised unfavourable treatment of aliens under Greek civil law relates to their inability to acquire title and certain other rights to land situated in the broadly defined border regions, which cannot be avoided by forming a Greek corporation if the controlling interest is in foreign hands.
It is to be noted that in the cases of Valsamis\textsuperscript{46} and Efstratiou,\textsuperscript{47} the European Court of Human Rights did not investigate the applicants’ ‘pacifist’ convictions. It considered them to be convincing, serious, coherent and important but also well-founded, because they emanated from the religious convictions of the applicants, who were Christian Jehovah’s Witnesses. This specific religious community enjoys constitutional protection as a ‘known religion’ in the Greek legal system, and it was therefore considered unnecessary that the Court conduct an investigation of their widely known convictions.

Concerning the term ‘national origin’, Article 4 of the Greek Constitution reads: ‘All persons possessing the qualifications for citizenship as specified by law are Greek citizens.’\textsuperscript{48}

\textit{iii) Disability}

In comparison with the concept adopted by the European Court of Justice (CJEU) in Joined Cases C-335/11 and C-337/11, Ring and Skouboe Werge, paragraph 37 (“disability is an evolving concept and that disability results from the interaction between persons with impairments and attitudinal and environmental barriers that hinders their full and effective participation in society on an equal basis with others”), there is an important difference: the definition in the Greek law 1556/85 provides a criterion of severity (50%) and the requirement to be registered in a special register, which is absent from the concept adopted by the CJEU. In any case, the two definitions are not really comparable in the sense that they serve different ends: the definition of the jurisprudence of the CJEU serves the principle of non-discrimination but the definition that is included in the Law 1556/1985 serves the quota policy, which is also served by Law 2643/1998. Law 1556/1985 includes a definition of the term “disadvantaged person” according to which a person is regarded as disadvantaged if his/ her perspectives to find or preserve a job are considered to be restricted. As a consequence, this broad definition includes disability. Law 2643/1998 is based on the principles that had been established by Law 1556/1985 and therefore it specifies its basic provisions. Law 1556/1985 serves the quota policy in the meaning that it incorporates in the Greek legal order a legal principle ruling that effective measures should be taken in order to protect the category of disadvantaged persons.

In specific, the aforementioned Law 1556/1985 on the ratification of the International Labour Organisation Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) \textsuperscript{47} European Court of Human Rights, ECHR/24095/94 (18.12.1996), para. 27.

\textsuperscript{48} There are at least six methods to acquire Greek nationality: 1. At birth; 2. By legitimation before age 18, through marriage of a Greek father to the mother and otherwise or by recognition as legitimate by a Greek father; 3. By adoption before age 18, by a Greek parent; 4. By naturalisation, which requires, among other prerequisites, a declaration before the municipal authorities and an application to the Ministry of Interior; 5. By enlistment in the Greek armed forces for persons of Greek origin; 6. Through special laws.
Convention (No. 159) of 1983 gives a definition of a disabled person based on the medical model. This Law includes general provisions concerning the improvement of professional life according to the relevant international standards as adopted, whereas Law 2643/1998 - that is mentioned below - defines the conditions under which some categories of persons with disabilities are entitled to have access to employment in public and private sector through the system of quotas, and therefore it indirectly provides definition of disability regarding these specific categories.\(^{49}\)

Furthermore, since 11 April 2012, after the ratification of the U.N. Convention of the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (Art.2) by the Law 4074/2012, the definition of disability that is included in the above Convention is regarded as part of the Greek legal order.

Law 3251/1955 on the ratification of International Labour Organisation Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) states that the State is obliged to supply health care benefits in cases of work accidents and occupational disease or illness such as serious illness, inability to work due to serious illness, or malfunction or reduction of a person’s bodily functions, or the loss of means of subsistence because of the supporting family member’s death, giving a definition of the notion of a disabled person.

Law 1136/1981 on the ratification of the European Code of Social Security declares that the State is obliged to supply health care benefits in cases of work accidents and ‘occupational diseases such as serious illness, inability to work due to serious illness or malfunction or reduction of a person’s bodily functions or the loss of means of subsistence because of the supporting family member’s death’, in this way defining the notion of disability in close relation to occupation and employment.

Law 2643/1998 on quotas provides a very restrictive definition of disability, mainly based on the medical model. This law is the main legislation on the employment of disabled persons, despite not being an anti-discrimination law.

A disabled person is defined as ‘a person with limited possibilities of finding work due to a chronic bodily, mental or psychological disease or impairment (persons with special needs), provided that his/her disability reaches a severity of 50% and is registered with the Manpower Employment Organisation (OAED) in a special register for unemployed people with disabilities.’\(^{50}\)

\(^{50}\) In the 1980s, emphasis in the terminology shifted from a person’s disability (άτομα με αναπηρίες) to a person’s special needs (άτομα με ειδικές ανάγκες). This term was first used in Law 1648/1986 and further adopted by Law 2643/1998 (currently in force). Registration with the Manpower Employment Organisation (OAED) in a special register does not constitute a prerequisite within the scope of Article 8 of Law 3174/2003, regulating contracts of definite duration and part-time work in the public sector or public entities.
In regard to the above definition:

- the disability must both reach a threshold of severity and limit a person’s normal range of life activities before it counts under the law;\(^{51}\)
- therefore, the definition views disability as the function of an interaction between the person and his/her environment;
- reversible and temporary impairments are not included;
- past or future disabilities are not included;
- perceived disability is not included;
- as regards social security, the definition of disability differs in the sense that the focus is placed mainly on the inability of the person to pursue his or her normal range of life activities;
- persons with disabilities who receive social security benefits that reach a certain threshold are not entitled to the protection of Law 2643/1998.

The anti-discrimination law, Law 3304/2005, on the application of the principle of equal treatment regardless of the grounds stated in the Framework Directives, is silent as to a definition of disability.

This is positive compared with Law 2643/1998 on quotas, which provides a very restrictive definition of disability, mainly based on the medical model. But it is also negative, as past, future, or imputed disability or disfigurements are not covered.

Persons associated with persons with disabilities are not covered.

\( iv \) Age

Equivalent terms have not been used.

\( v \) sexual orientation

Equivalent terms have not been used.

\( c \) Are there any restrictions related to the scope of ‘age’ as a protected ground (e.g. a minimum age below which the anti-discrimination law does not apply)?

As far as the ‘age’ ground is concerned, there are many provisions in various laws related to a wide range of issues covering legal capacity, employment and occupation. Specifically, in the anti-discrimination law, Law 3304/2005, it has been stipulated that there is no discrimination on the ground of age in cases where there is a different treatment below a minimum age (which is not defined) or above a maximum age (also not defined) in regard to access to employment and occupation, \[^{51}\] Although the latter is understood in the sense that a disabled person with a 50% severity level of disability suffers limitations in the free labour market.

2.1.2 Multiple discrimination

a) Please describe any legal rules (or plans for the adoption of rules) or case law (and its outcome) in the field of anti-discrimination which deal with situations of multiple discrimination. This includes the way the equality body (or bodies) are tackling cross-grounds or multiple grounds discrimination.

Would, in your view, national or European legislation dealing with multiple discrimination be necessary in order to facilitate the adjudication of such cases?

There is no case law in the field of anti-discrimination which deal with situations of multiple discrimination.

As far as legal rules are concerned, on 5 August 2011 a law concerning a general reform of the Labour Inspectorate Body and other provisions on Social Insurance was passed in the Greek Parliament. This new legislation describes thoroughly the competence and the mission of this Body as an auditor in the field of protection of workers and employees rights. This is the first time a legislative instrument explicitly refers to multiple discrimination, as well as to people living with HIV/AIDS concerning discrimination (as a special category of disabled persons). Although the Greek legislation regarding equal treatment (Laws 3304/2005 and 3896/2010) does not refer to multiple discrimination, Law 3996/2011 “on the reform of the Labour Inspection Body” in its article 2 par. 1 (h) states clearly that: [The Labour Inspectorate Body] supervises the implementation of the principle of equal treatment irrespective of racial or ethnic origin, religion or other beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation, taking into consideration instances of multiple discrimination in accordance with article 19 of Law 3304/2005. Moreover, on the basis of article 10 of Law 3304.2010 supervises the compliance with the principle of equal treatment with regard to persons with disabilities, including people living with HIV/AIDS, only in the employment field.

There is no information available from the equality bodies regarding their jurisprudence for the year 2013 to assist in assessing the way they are tackling cross-grounds or multiple grounds discrimination.

It seems that national or European legislation dealing with multiple discrimination could be necessary in order to facilitate the adjudication of such cases.

52 See also Annex 1: Table of Key National Anti-discrimination Legislation, which refers to explicit or implicit discriminatory grounds related to Directives 2000/43 and 2000/78.

b) How have multiple discrimination cases involving one of Art. 19 TFEU grounds and gender been adjudicated by the courts (regarding the burden of proof and the award of potential higher damages)? Have these cases been treated under one single ground or as multiple discrimination cases?

There is no relevant case-law from the Greek courts.

2.1.3 Assumed and associated discrimination

a) Does national law (including case law) prohibit discrimination based on perception or assumption of what a person is? (e.g. where a person is discriminated against because another person assumes that he/she is a Muslim or has a certain sexual orientation, even though that turns out to be an incorrect perception or assumption).

There are no relevant Greek provisions or concepts or case-law on discrimination based on perceptions or assumption of what a person is.

b) Does national law (including case law) prohibit discrimination based on association with persons with particular characteristics (e.g. association with persons of a particular ethnic group or the primary carer of a disabled person)? If so, how? Is national law in line with the judgment in Case C-303/06 Coleman v Attridge Law and Steve Law?

According to Greek law, only persons who, in a comparable situation to that of others, are treated less favourably or are placed in a disadvantageous situation because of characteristics which are particular to them can rely on Greek anti-discrimination law. Therefore, Greek law is not in line with the judgment in Case C-303/06 Coleman v Attridge Law and Steve Law.

2.2 Direct discrimination (Article 2(2)(a))

a) How is direct discrimination defined in national law? Please indicate whether the definition complies with those given in the directives.

- Regarding discrimination on the grounds of racial or national origin, (a) direct discrimination shall be taken to occur where one person is treated less favourably than another is, has been or would be treated in a comparable situation. (Article 3(a)).
- Regarding discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation as regards employment and occupation, (a) direct discrimination shall be taken to occur where one person is treated less favourably than another is, has been or would be treated in a comparable situation. (Article 7(1)(a)).

Therefore, the definition complies with those given in the directives.

b) Are discriminatory statements or discriminatory job vacancy announcements capable of constituting direct discrimination in national law? (as in Case C-54/07 Firma Feryn).

According to the definitions in Law 3304/2005, any discriminatory statement or discriminatory job vacancies announcement, such as the one in Case C-54/07 Firma Feryn, constitutes direct discrimination.

c) Does the law permit justification of direct discrimination generally, or in relation to particular grounds? If so, what test must be satisfied to justify direct discrimination? (See also 4.7.1 below).

Anti-discrimination Law 3304/2005 permits justification of direct discrimination in relation to all grounds. More specifically, this law stipulates that

- a difference of treatment which is based on a characteristic related to racial or ethnic origin shall not constitute discrimination where, by reason of the nature of the particular occupational activities concerned or of the context in which they are carried out, such a characteristic constitutes a genuine and determining occupational requirement, and the requirement is proportionate. (Article 5).
- a difference of treatment which is based on a characteristic related to religious or other beliefs, age, disability or sexual orientation shall not constitute discrimination where, by reason of the nature of the particular occupational activities concerned or of the context in which they are carried out, such a characteristic constitutes a genuine and determining occupational requirement, and the requirement is proportionate. (Article 9(1)).

Moreover, Article 9(2) of the Anti-Discrimination Law stipulates that the religious or other beliefs referred to in Article 9(1), should also be ‘a genuine, legitimate and justified occupational requirement’.

The test that must be satisfied to justify direct discrimination is as follows: a difference of treatment, which is based on a characteristic related to any of the grounds, shall be justified if, by reason of the nature of the particular occupational activities concerned or of the context in which they are carried out, such a characteristic constitutes a genuine and determining occupational requirement, and the requirement is proportionate.

d) In relation to age discrimination, if the definition is based on ‘less favourable treatment’ does the law specify how a comparison is to be made?
The definition for discrimination related to age is based on ‘less favourable treatment’, but Article 11 of Law 3304/2005 provides that differences of treatment on grounds of age shall not constitute discrimination if, within the context of national law, they are justified by employment policy, labour market and vocational training objectives, and the means of achieving those aims are appropriate and necessary.

2.2.1 Situation Testing

a) Does national law clearly permit or prohibit the use of ‘situation testing’? If so, how is this defined and what are the procedural conditions for admissibility of such evidence in court? For what discrimination grounds is situation testing permitted? If not all grounds are included, what are the reasons given for this limitation? If the law is silent please indicate.

National law does not explicitly disallow the use of situational testing but at the same time makes no provision for it.

The law is silent.

No relevant jurisprudence exists, because situational testing has not yet been used in practice by NGOs in any category of case (not only in discrimination cases). In any case, the Constitution prohibits the use of evidence which has been acquired in violation of the rights of privacy of correspondence (Article 19), of domicile (Article 9) and of protection of personal data (Article 9A).

According to the Greek Code of Civil Procedure (art. 342) there are exclusively seven “means of evidence”, and situation testing is not included among them. However, article 347 stipulates that in cases where probability of facts is considered “by law” (in general) to be an “adequate factor” to establish evidence, the court has discreional power to take into consideration any suitable means in order to substantiate “probability” and form its opinion about the truth of facts. As a result, it is a matter of jurisprudence to interprete if “situation testing” is related or not with the issue of “probability of discrimination” as defined in article 14 of the antidiscrimination Law 3304/2005 (“Burden of proof”) and therefore if it falls or not into the scope of the legal provision of article 347 of the Code which allows other means of evidence.

b) Outline how situation testing is used in practice and by whom (e.g. NGOs, equality body, etc.).

There is no precedent.

c) Is there any reluctance to use situation testing as evidence in court (e.g. ethical or methodology issues)? In this respect, does evolution in other countries influence your national law (European strategic litigation issue)?
Greek national law does not explicitly prohibit the use of situational testing. Nevertheless, there is no precedent for the use of situational testing in the Greek courts. Evolution in other European countries has not influenced the Greek legislature so far.

d) Outline important case law within the national legal system on this issue.

There is no case-law on this topic.

2.3 Indirect discrimination (Article 2(2)(b))

a) How is indirect discrimination defined in national law on discrimination? Please indicate whether the definition complies with those given in the directives.

Law 3304/2005 defines indirect discrimination as follows:

Indirect discrimination shall be taken to occur where an apparently neutral provision, criterion or practice would put persons of a particular racial or national origin at a particular disadvantage compared with other persons. (Article 3(b));

Indirect discrimination shall be taken to occur where an apparently neutral provision, criterion or practice would put persons of a particular religion or belief, a particular disability, a particular age, or a particular sexual orientation at a particular disadvantage compared with other persons. (Article 7(1)(b)).

b) What test must be satisfied to justify indirect discrimination? What are the legitimate aims that can be accepted by courts? Do the legitimate aims as accepted by courts have the same value as the general principle of equality, from a human rights perspective as prescribed in domestic law? What is considered as an appropriate and necessary measure to pursue a legitimate aim?

There is no relevant jurisprudence or practice in these matters.

c) Is this compatible with the Directives?

It is compatible with the Directives.

d) In relation to age discrimination, does the law specify how a comparison is to be made?

Not specifically. Article 11 of Law 3304/2005 provides that differences of treatment on grounds of age shall not constitute discrimination if within the context of national law they are justified by employment policy, labour market and vocational training objectives and the means of achieving that aim are appropriate and necessary.
2.3.1 Statistical Evidence

a) Does national law permit the use of statistical evidence to establish indirect discrimination? If so, what are the conditions for it to be admissible in court?

No, national law does not explicitly prohibit the use of statistical evidence, but at the same time does not expressly allow it. No relevant jurisprudence exists.

b) Is the use of such evidence widespread? Is there any reluctance to use statistical data as evidence in court (e.g. ethical or methodology issues)? In this respect, does evolution in other countries influence your national law (European strategic litigation issue)?

The use of statistical evidence is not widespread.

The only reluctance to use statistical data as evidence arises from legislation relating to the collection of data.

Concerning the question about influence on Greek law from evolution in other countries, the answer is negative; there is no such influence.

c) Please illustrate the most important case law in this area.

There are no cases in this area.

d) Are there national rules which permit data collection? Please answer in respect to all five grounds. The aim of this question is to find out whether or not data collection is allowed for the purposes of litigation and positive action measures. Specifically, are statistical data used to design positive action measures? How are these data collected/ generated?

According to Article 7 of Law 2472/1997 regulating data collection:

1) The collection and processing of sensitive data is prohibited.
2) Exceptionally, the collection and processing of sensitive data, as well as the establishment and operation of the relevant file, will be permitted by the Authority, when one or more of the following conditions occur:

- Processing relates to data made public by the data subject or is necessary for the recognition, exercise or defence of rights in a court of justice or before a disciplinary body.
• Processing is carried out exclusively for research and scientific purposes provided that anonymity is maintained and all necessary measures for the protection of the persons involved are taken.

According to Article 2 of Law 2472/1997:

‘Sensitive data’ shall mean data referring to racial or ethnic origin, political opinions, religious or philosophical beliefs, membership of a society, association or trade union, health, social welfare and sexual life as well as criminal charges or convictions.

Article 5(1) of the same law then provides that ‘processing of personal data will be permitted only when the data subject has given his/her consent’.

2.4 Harassment (Article 2(3))

a) How is harassment defined in national law? Does this definition comply with those of the directives? Include reference to criminal offences of harassment insofar as these could be used to tackle discrimination falling within the scope of the Directives.

According to Article 2(2) of Law 3304/2005, as amended by Law 3625/2007, harassment shall occur when unwanted conduct related to any of the grounds referred to in Article 1 takes place with the purpose or effect of violating the dignity and of creating an intimidating, hostile, degrading, humiliating or offensive environment.

b) Is harassment prohibited as a form of discrimination?

Yes, it is prohibited as a form of discrimination.

c) Are there any additional sources on the concept of harassment (e.g. an official Code of Practice)?

Some aspects of sexual harassment may come under the scope of certain provisions of the Penal Code, such as that of Article 337 (insult to a person’s sexual dignity), which stipulates that ‘whoever with indecent gestures or proposals violates someone’s sexual dignity is punished by imprisonment or fine’.

This provision applies in cases of harassment in conjunction with the offence in Article 343 of the Penal Code (sexual crime with the abuse of one’s power). Furthermore, Article 361 of the Penal Code, which provides that whoever offends someone’s honour by words or actions or in any way is punished by imprisonment or fine, will obviously apply in some but not all cases of sexual harassment. Harassing behaviour could also fall within the scope of Article 385 of the Penal Code (the crime of extortion or blackmail), depending on the specific circumstances of each case.
Likewise, the provision of Article 353 of the Penal Code could be relevant in cases of sexual harassment, if a scandal with the use of sexually inappropriate actions can be substantiated.

d) What is the scope of liability for discrimination? Specifically, can employers or service providers (in the case of racial or ethnic origin, but please also look at the other grounds of discrimination) e.g. landlords, schools, hospitals, be held liable for the actions of employees? Can they be held liable for actions of third parties (e.g. tenants, clients or customers)? Can the individual harasser or discriminator (e.g. co-worker or client) be held liable? Can trade unions or other trade/professional associations be held liable for actions of their members?

The scope of liability is narrow. There are no provisions concerning extension of liability as far as actions of employees, actions of third parties, actions of co-workers or clients and actions of members of trade unions or other trade/professional associations are concerned. However, under the general civil law (article 922 of the Civil Code), employers are liable for the actions of their employees.

2.5 Instructions to discriminate (Article 2(4))

a) Does national law (including case law) prohibit instructions to discriminate? If yes, does it contain any specific provisions regarding the liability of legal persons for such actions?

Law 3304/2005 on anti-discrimination prohibits instructions to discriminate. (Article 2 provides that ‘an instruction to discriminate against persons on any of the grounds referred to in Article 1 shall be deemed to be discrimination’.) Nevertheless, it does not contain any specific provisions regarding the liability of legal persons for such actions.

b) Does national law go beyond the Directives’ requirement? (e.g. including incitement)

c) What is the scope of liability for discrimination? Specifically, can employers or service providers (in the case of racial or ethnic origin)(e.g. landlords, schools, hospitals) be held liable for the actions of employees giving instruction to discriminate? Can the individual who discriminated because s/he received such an instruction be held liable?

The scope of liability is narrow. There are no provisions concerning extension of liability as far as actions of employees, actions of third parties, actions of co-workers or clients and actions of members of trade unions or other trade/professional associations are concerned. As for employees etc, there is vicarious liability and therefore the individual who discriminated because s/he received such an instruction cannot be held liable. This means that employers are liable for discrimination flowing from instructions.

2.6 Reasonable accommodation duties (Article 2(2)(b)(ii) and Article 5 Directive 2000/78)

a) How does national law implement the duty to provide reasonable accommodation for people with disabilities? In particular, specify when the duty applies, the criteria for assessing the extent of the duty and any definition of ‘reasonable’. For example, does national law define what would be a “disproportionate burden” for employers? Is the availability of financial assistance from the State to be taken into account in assessing whether there is a disproportionate burden?

Article 10 of Law 3304/2005 provides that: In order to guarantee compliance with the principle of equal treatment towards persons with disabilities, employers shall take all appropriate measures, where needed in a particular case, to enable a person with a disability to have access to, participate in, or advance in employment, or to undergo training, unless such measures would impose a disproportionate burden on the employer. This burden shall not be disproportionate when it is sufficiently remedied by measures existing within the framework of the disability policy.

Moreover, on 11 April of 2012, the Greek Parliament with the Law 4074/2012 ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol. The Convention adopts a broad categorization of persons with disabilities and reaffirms that all persons with all types of disabilities must enjoy all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It clarifies and qualifies how all categories of rights apply to persons with disabilities and identifies areas where adaptations have to be made for persons with disabilities to effectively exercise their rights and areas where their rights have been violated, and where protection of rights must be reinforced.

In particular, as far as non-discrimination is concerned, Greece now shall prohibit all discrimination on the basis of disability and guarantee to persons with disabilities equal and effective legal protection against discrimination on all grounds. Moreover, according to the Article 5 of the Convention, Greece, in order to promote equality and eliminate discrimination, shall take all appropriate steps to ensure that reasonable accommodation is provided. Finally, specific measures which are necessary to accelerate or achieve de facto equality of persons with disabilities shall not be considered discrimination under the terms of the Convention.

After the ratification of the Convention by Greece, all the rights that are included in its provisions can be regarded as incorporated in the Greek legal order and therefore they are legally binding, which means that individuals can rely upon the Convention before national courts.

b) Please also specify if the definition of a disability for the purposes of claiming a reasonable accommodation is the same as for claiming protection from non-discrimination in general, i.e. is the personal scope of the national law different (more limited) in the context of reasonable accommodation than it is with regard to other elements of disability non-discrimination law.

In Greek non-discrimination law there is no definition of disability for the purposes of claiming a reasonable accommodation.

However, after the adoption of the Law 4074/2012 (see above - Chapter 2.6a) by the Greek Parliament (on 11 April 2012), which ratified the U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the right of persons with disabilities to enjoy "a work environment that is open, inclusive and accessible" to them as defined in par.1 of the Article 27 of the Convention is guaranteed, and therefore a claim for a reasonable accommodation on their behalf is protected by the Greek legal order.

Moreover, concerning the definition of disability for the purposes of claiming a reasonable accommodation, there is a judicial precedent. An applicant before the Athens Court of First Instance, a bank officer and person with disabilities, contested her transfer to another bank branch which was far from her home. The Court investigated if there were other employees with the same qualifications available to work at that bank branch. When the Court verified such availability, it ruled against the bank (Judgement 2048/2008). However, it is noteworthy that the Court did not take the chance given by this case in order to provide a clear definition in a direct way.

Nevertheless, Judgement 2048/2008 confused the duty to provide reasonable accommodation with the general rule of non-discrimination, in the sense that, even if there were no other employees with the same qualifications available to work at the particular bank branch, the duty to provide reasonable accommodation is very strict and favours persons with disabilities.

c) Does national law provide for a duty to provide a reasonable accommodation for people with disabilities in areas outside employment? Does the definition of “disproportionate burden” in this context, as contained in legislation and developed in case law, differ in any way from the definition used with regard to employment?

Law 3304/2005 makes no provision for this duty. There is no relevant case law. The ratified UN CRPD can be probably regarded as a legal basis for more possibilities in the field of reasonable accommodation (eg education, health etc) but its relevance with the issue is unclear until there is case law.
d) Does failure to meet the duty of reasonable accommodation count as discrimination? Is there a justification defence? How does this relate to the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination? What is the potential sanction? (i.e.: fine)

According to Judgement 2048/2008 of the Athens Court of First Instance, failure to meet the duty of reasonable accommodation counts as direct discrimination. What really happened is that the court did not consider “reasonable accommodation” as a separate notion or provision but it regarded it as a form of direct discrimination, which means that the claim of the applicant to be entitled to a reasonable accommodation was not accepted.

For this type of discrimination there is no defence of justification other than on grounds of disproportionate burden.

Therefore, there is no specific separate sanction for failure to meet the duty of reasonable accommodation. The general sanction for a direct form of discrimination, according to the antidiscrimination Law 3304/2005, is provided by the Law 2639/1998 (art.16) and concerns administrative sanctions for employers that include a fine ranging from 150 euros to 10,000 euros and a temporary interruption of its business for three days.

e) Has national law (including case law) implemented the duty to provide reasonable accommodation in respect of any of the other grounds (e.g. religion)

i) race or ethnic origin

No, national law has not implemented the duty to provide reasonable accommodation in respect of race or ethnic origin.

ii) religion or belief

No, national law has not implemented the duty to provide reasonable accommodation in respect of any of religion or belief.

iii) Age

No, national law has not implemented the duty to provide reasonable accommodation in respect of age.

iv) sexual orientation

No, national law has not implemented the duty to provide reasonable accommodation in respect of sexual orientation.
f) Please specify whether this is within the employment field or in areas outside employment

i) race or ethnic origin

The lack of provisions concerning such a duty in respect of race or ethnic origin regards also all areas outside employment.

ii) religion or belief

The lack of provisions concerning such a duty in respect of religion or belief regards also all areas outside employment.

iii) Age

The lack of provisions concerning such a duty in respect of age regards also all areas outside employment.

iv) sexual orientation

The lack of provisions concerning such a duty in respect of sexual orientation regards also all areas outside employment.

g) Is it common practice to provide for reasonable accommodation for other grounds than disability in the public or private sector?

No, there is no such a practice.

h) Does national law clearly provide for the shift of the burden of proof, when claiming the right to reasonable accommodation?

Yes, Law 3304/2005 clearly provides for the shift of the burden of proof when claiming the right to reasonable accommodation. Article 14(1) of Law 3304/2005 stipulates the following:

When persons who consider themselves wronged because the principle of equal treatment has not been applied to them establish, before a court or other competent authority, facts from which it may be presumed that there has been direct or indirect discrimination, it shall be for the respondent to prove that there has been no breach of the principle of equal treatment.

i) Does national law require services available to the public, buildings and infrastructure to be designed and built in a disability-accessible way? If so, could and has a failure to comply with such legislation be relied upon in a discrimination case based on the legislation transposing Directive 2000/78?
National law (Law 2831/2000, Article 28) requires buildings and infrastructure to be designed in a disability-accessible way. The provision is very extensive: it establishes detailed technical accessibility standards and permission for any new building is conditional on its compliance with these standards. In practice, this law is generally complied with.

j) Does national law contain a general duty to provide accessibility by anticipation for people with disabilities? If so, how is accessibility defined, in what fields (employment, social protection, goods and services, transport, housing, education, etc.) and who is covered by this obligation? On what grounds can a failure to provide accessibility be justified?

No, Greek national law makes no provision for a general duty to provide accessibility for people with disabilities by anticipation.

k) Does national law require public services to also translate some or all of their documents in Braille? (i.e. Tax declarations, general information) Is translation in sign languages provided in some of the public services where needed? What is the practice?

No, national law does not require public services to also translate some or all of their documents in Braille. No translation in sign languages is provided.

l) Please explain briefly the existing national legislation concerning people with disabilities (beyond the simple prohibition of discrimination). Does national law provide for special rights for people with disabilities?

Even before the new law transposing the Directives, Greek employers had a limited legal obligation to provide reasonable accommodation for people with disabilities. This duty derives from the general clause of Article 662 of the Civil Code (‘duty of care’).\(^{55}\)

Many provisions of Law 1568/1985 on health and safety at work could also support this.\(^{56}\) However, the relevant provisions of this law have not as yet been activated, mainly due to failure of enterprises to employ occupational health doctors and safety technicians.

In practice, much importance is attached to Article 8 of Law 2643/1998, which makes provision for subsidies to employers to help them accommodate compulsorily placed workers with disabilities (paragraph 2) and obliges employers to provide six additional days holiday for workers with disabilities (paragraph 4).

\(^{55}\) The ‘duty of care’ is not disability-specific. It covers all employees employed by the same employer, but not job applicants.

\(^{56}\) Mainly Articles 9(e), 10(b), 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21.
Compulsory placement is made by the State and is obligatory for the employer with effect from the issue of the decision by the competent health authority. Compulsory placement creates a work relationship between employer and employee and a compulsorily placed employee is entitled to all the rights (e.g. rights to pay, leave), which all employees enjoy.

There are no statistical data on the specific impact that austerity measures have on compulsory placement in Greece but it is known by common experience that usually in times of crisis most employers tend to avoid any kind of financial cost for them and therefore such provisions can easily be regarded by several of them as extra “burdens” for their economic survival.

This category of employee enjoys preferential and privileged treatment compared to other employees who are not compulsorily placed, especially as regards termination of the contract of employment; employers cannot object to placements (they have to accept such employees even if they do not know what to do with him/her). However, it should be emphasised that this provision cannot be invoked by individual persons with disabilities on their own behalf. In addition, it covers a very small section of disabled workers, as it applies only to those compulsorily placed, not to those recruited freely in the labour market. Moreover, accommodation in the above context means no more than ergonomic adjustments in the workplace. No legal provision defines the concept of ‘accommodation’.

The notions of reasonable or disproportionate burden are absent from the legal debate. The duty to provide accommodation on the basis of the Civil Code clause (‘duty of care’) does not go beyond the essential functions of the job.

From information available, the subject of provision by the employer of reasonable accommodation to disabled workers is not on the agenda of trade unions.

2.7 Sheltered or semi-sheltered accommodation/employment

a) To what extent does national law make provision for sheltered or semi-sheltered accommodation/employment for workers with disabilities?

According to Article 21(4) of the Greek Constitution, the acquisition of a home by the homeless or those inadequately sheltered shall constitute an object of special State care.

Would such activities be considered to constitute employment under national law-including for the purposes of application of the anti-discrimination law?

57 It is estimated (accurate statistical data is not available) that numbers of compulsorily placed employees do not exceed 1% of all disabled workers.
This form of employment (sheltered or semi-sheltered) does not exist in Greece – regardless of purposes.
3 PERSONAL AND MATERIAL SCOPE

3.1 Personal scope

3.1.1 EU and non-EU nationals (Recital 13 and Article 3(2) Directive 2000/43 and Recital 12 and Article 3(2) Directive 2000/78)

Are there residence or citizenship/nationality requirements for protection under the relevant national laws transposing the Directives?

There is only one uniform law (Law 3304/2005) transposing the Directives; its provisions apply to every person in both the public and private sectors. This law does not provide for any restriction related to residence. However, in Articles 4(2) and 8(2) it provides a restriction related to citizenship/nationality requirements, since it stipulates that it does not cover differences of treatment based on nationality, for example in the exercise of the general interest of public authorities or the State (Law 2431/1996 on appointment or employment of EU nationals to the public administration), and is without prejudice to provisions and conditions relating to the entry into and residence of third-country nationals or stateless persons on Greek territory and to any treatment which arises from the legal status of third-country nationals and stateless persons. Furthermore, Law 2431/1996 provides that the precondition of Greek nationality is not included within the other prerequisites for the employment of EU nationals. According to Article 1, the only exemption allowed requires that nationals of other Member States are employed in positions where the duties and competences do not result in direct or indirect participation in the exercise of the general interest of public authorities, the State, or other public sector interests.

It has already been noted that as regards the status of aliens, an alien is entitled to the same rights as a Greek national under the applicable law, pursuant to the Greek choice of law rules. Many bilateral treaties signed by the Greek State also call for national or most-favoured nation treatment of aliens. According to Law 1975/1991 on entry, departure, stay, employment and deportation of aliens, an ‘alien is every person who does not have Greek nationality or a person who is not indigenous’.\(^5\)^

Presidential Decrees 358/1997 and 359/1997 confer equal employment rights on Greek citizens and all foreign nationals legally working in Greece, with no discrimination, racial or otherwise. Section 19 of the Nationality Code, under which \(^{58}\) However, since 1997 the Greek Manpower Employment Organisation (OAED) has put into effect a long-term ‘Operational Programme to Combat Exclusion from the Labour Market’ that covers ‘immigrants from third countries, refugees, persons repatriated from Western European countries, persons repatriated from countries other than Western European countries, Pomaks and Roma’. Beneficiaries of this project are to be ‘unemployed persons or persons with no steady employment’. The project aims at providing vocational training and facilitating access for the above groups to the labour market.

Greek nationals who leave the country with no intention of returning could be deprived of their nationality was repealed by Law 2623/1998.

Furthermore, Article 4 of the Civil Code stipulates that aliens enjoy the same civil law rights as Greek nationals.

From this general legal principle it has been concluded in Greek law that aliens legally employed or working in Greece are subject to Greek labour law under the same conditions as Greek nationals (Article 3(1)(a) and (c) of the Directive). Law 1876/1990 on free collective bargaining covers every person employed in the private sector.\textsuperscript{59} However, Greek labour law contains provisions discriminatory for alien immigrant workers, such as those regarding compensation in cases of accidents at work. According to the Decree of 24 July/25 August 1920 (amended), compensation due to alien workers is dependent on various conditions such as their residence in Greece.\textsuperscript{60} According to the same law, alien workers are entitled to the same treatment as nationals on condition that there is reciprocity between Greece and the respective countries of origin of such aliens by virtue of a relevant inter-state agreements. These provisions raise serious questions of compatibility between the above Greek legislation and international social rights standards established, \textit{inter alia}, by the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

a) \textit{Does national law distinguish between natural persons and legal persons, either for purposes of protection against discrimination or liability for discrimination?}

Law 3304/2005 does not distinguish between natural and legal persons as far as the protection provided is concerned. However, it is logical that the grounds of anti-discrimination provisions such racial or ethnic origin, age, disability and sexual orientation suggest that the protection based on them is applied essentially to natural persons, since they alone have characteristics related to such grounds. On the other hand, it can be argued that the protection of the anti-discrimination law, if applicable, can include foreign legal persons operating in Greece, or organisations the scope of which is based on religious or other beliefs, as explicitly provided for in Article 9(2) of this law. It is obvious that both natural and legal persons are liable when discrimination derives from them.

b) Is national law applicable to both private and public sector including public bodies?

Yes, it is applicable to both sectors.

3.1.3 Scope of liability

Are there any liability provisions other than those mentioned under harassment and instruction to discriminate? (e.g. employers, landlords, tenants, clients, customers, trade unions)

The liability for discriminatory practices in general on the grounds described by the anti-discrimination legislation in Law 3304/2005 can be civil, penal or administrative.

In civil law, apart from liability based on violation of contractual obligations (συμβατική ευθύνη), the Civil Code establishes the liability of every person committing unlawful acts (αδικοπρακτική ευθύνη). The civil liability of natural and legal persons for violations committed by third persons acting on their behalf is set out in Articles 334 and 922 of the Civil Code (Article 922: tortious liability). As regards the responsibility of employers and of service-providers, Article 334 of the Greek Civil Code provides that a party at fault is also responsible for the fault of a person whom he/she employs in performing his/her obligation to the same extent as his/her own fault. However, such responsibility may in principle be limited or contractually excluded in advance, subject to the exception of responsibility for wilful misconduct or for gross negligence (Article 332 of the Civil Code). Any agreement to the contrary is void. Any agreements excluding in advance a party at fault’s responsibility even for slight negligence, if the injured party is his/her employee, or if the responsibility arises from the conduct of an enterprise for which prior concession by the appropriate authority was granted to the party at fault are also void. According to civil law, a legal person can be held liable for acts or omissions of persons acting on its behalf and these latter persons can be jointly liable with the legal person, while the injured party can have recourse to either of them (Article 71 of the Civil Code).

Under the Civil Code, as far as tortious liability is concerned, whoever ‘unlawfully and culpably’ or ‘intentionally in a manner which violates the commands of morality’ causes damage to another is bound to provide reparation to the other for any damage caused. The Civil Code introduces strict liability in the case of liability for employees. Accordingly, Article 922 of the Civil Code stipulates that a person who appoints another to perform a function is bound to make reparations to a third party for the damage caused by an unlawful and culpable act or omission committed by that other person in the execution of this task. Moreover, if several persons unlawfully and culpably cause damage, or if several persons are responsible for the damage, they are all liable jointly and severally (Article 926). These rules also apply to liability for non-material damages (Article 932) and to commercial relations. This latter provision, of course, covers cases of harassment.
As far as penal liability is concerned, only natural persons can be accused of criminal offences related to anti-discrimination provisions.

As the conduct must be personal, an offence cannot be committed by or attributed to a legal entity such as a corporation. In criminal law, the ‘principle of imputability’ or ‘principle of guilt’ is important. This is based on Article 2(1) of the Constitution, which obliges the state to respect and protect human dignity. According to this principle, no penalty may be imposed for a criminal offence unless the offender can be blamed for such offence. Therefore, criminal law does not recognise any cases of strict or absolute liability.

On the contrary, employers or or service-providers cannot be held liable for actions of third parties. Trade unions or other trade or professional associations also cannot be held liable for actions of third parties, as this is not covered by civil law provisions and is contrary to freedom of association under Article 12 of the Greek Constitution. Individual harassers or discriminators can be held liable under the provisions of Article 914 of the Civil Code.

3.2 Material Scope

3.2.1 Employment, self-employment and occupation

Does national anti-discrimination legislation apply to all sectors of public and private employment and occupation, including contract work, self-employment, military service, holding statutory office? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is discrimination in employment, self-employment and occupation dealt with in any other legislation?

In paragraphs 3.2.2 - 3.2.5, you should specify if each of the following areas is fully and expressly covered by national law for each of the grounds covered by the Directives.

1. Without prejudice to paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this article, and to Article 9, the principle of equal treatment, as established in this law, shall apply to all persons, as regards both the public and private sectors, including public bodies, in relation to:

   (a) conditions for access to employment and occupation in general, including selection criteria and recruitment conditions, whatever the

61 On professional requirements.
62 Self-employment is not strictly included in the law. However, the specific provision could be interpreted in a way that would allow “self employment” to be included.
branch of activity and at all levels of the professional hierarchy, as well as the terms of professional growth including promotion;

(b) access to all types and to all levels of vocational guidance, vocational training, and retraining, vocational reguidance including practical work experience;

(c) employment and working conditions, including dismissals and pay;

(d) membership of, and involvement in, an organisation of workers or employers, or any organisation whose members carry on a particular profession, including the benefits provided for by such organisations;

(e) This Law does not cover differences of treatment based on nationality and is without prejudice to provisions and conditions relating to the entry into and residence of third-country nationals and stateless persons in the territory of Member States, and to any treatment which arises from the legal status of the third-country nationals and stateless persons concerned.

2. This Law does not apply to payments of any kind made by state schemes or similar, including state social security or social protection schemes.

3. This Law, in so far as it relates to discrimination on the grounds of special needs and age, shall not apply to the armed forces.

The Democratic Society exemption

This Law shall be without prejudice to measures which, in a democratic society, are necessary for public security, for the maintenance of public order and the prevention of criminal offences, for the protection of health and for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Professional requirements

Notwithstanding Articles 2(1) and 7(1), a difference of treatment which is based on a characteristic related to any of the grounds referred to above, shall not constitute discrimination where, by reason of the nature of the particular occupational activities concerned or of the context in which they are carried out, such a characteristic constitutes a genuine and determining occupational requirement, provided the objective is legitimate and the requirement is proportionate.

63 The phrase ‘special needs’ refers to disability. (In Greece, people with disabilities are usually referred to as ‘persons with special needs’).

64 That is, racial or ethnic origin, religion or beliefs, sexual orientation, age or disability.

65 The proviso: ‘that the objective is legitimate’ of the Framework Directive has been omitted in the text of this Law.
The Health and Safety Defence

With regard to disabled persons, the principle of equal treatment shall be without prejudice to the establishment or maintenance of measures on the protection of health and safety at work.

Law 3488/2006 on the implementation of the principle of sex equality in employment relations and other provisions combating sex discrimination in occupation and employment, vocational training, access to occupation, is restricted in its application to persons who work in the private sector.

Furthermore, Law 1483/1984 on the protection and guarantee of facilities for employees with family responsibilities, which prohibits dismissal of female employees during pregnancy and one year thereafter, does not apply to the public sector, public entities, local authority organisations.

3.2.2 Conditions for access to employment, to self-employment or to occupation, including selection criteria, recruitment conditions and promotion, whatever the branch of activity and at all levels of the professional hierarchy (Article 3(1)(a))

Does national law on discrimination include access to employment, self-employment or occupation as described in the Directives? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is discrimination regarding access to employment, self-employment and occupation dealt with in any other legislation?

Is the public sector dealt with differently to the private sector?

Conditions for access to employment, to self-employment or to occupation, as described in the Directives, including selection criteria, recruitment conditions and promotion are protected against discrimination.

In general, the public sector is not dealt with differently to the private sector.

Law 3304/2005 allows exemptions to the application of the principle of equal treatment as far as professional requirements in various contexts are concerned.

3.2.3 Employment and working conditions, including pay and dismissals (Article 3(1)(c))

Does national law on discrimination include working conditions including pay and dismissals? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is discrimination regarding working conditions dealt with in any other legislation?

In respect of occupational pensions, how does national law on discrimination ensure the prohibition of discrimination on all the grounds covered by Directive 2000/78 EC?

NB: Case C-267/06 Maruko confirmed that occupational pensions constitute part of an employee’s pay under Directive 2000/78 EC. In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

Note that this can include contractual conditions of employment as well as the conditions in which work is, or is expected to be, carried out.

Yes, national law on discrimination includes working conditions including pay and dismissals.

In regard to scope, Law 3304/2005 adopts almost literally Article 3 of Directive 2000/78/EC:

Without prejudice to paragraphs 2, 3, 4 of this article, and to Article 9, the principle of equal treatment, as established in this law, shall apply to all persons, as regards both the public and private sectors, including public bodies, in relation to: conditions for access to employment and occupation in general, including selection criteria and recruitment conditions, whatever the branch of activity and at all levels of the professional hierarchy, as well as the terms of professional growth including promotion; employment and working conditions, including dismissals and pay.

In our view, by adopting this definition the national law ensures the prohibition of discrimination even in respect of occupational pensions because they are directly, or even indirectly, related to ‘employment and working conditions, including … pay’. As yet, there is no jurisprudence related to this provision of Law 3304/2005.

Even after Case C-267/06 Maruko, which confirmed that occupational pensions constitute part of an employee’s pay under Directive 2000/78 EC, there is no related jurisprudence.

According to Article 3(2) of Presidential Decree 358/1997 on preconditions and procedure for the legal stay and employment of aliens in Greece who are not natives of the Member States of the EU, an employer who omits to declare the employment of a non-native of another EU Member State has infringed the regulations of the Social Insurance Funds and all occupational and social security obligations, as if the work were supplied within a legal contract of employment.

Presidential Decree 359/1997/ ‘Granting a residence permit for a limited period to foreigners’ provides that a foreign employee who has been granted a temporary residence permit acquires the same occupational rights and obligations as a Greek employee as regards pay, working terms and conditions, and the insurance rights and contributions of the employer. Presidential Decrees 358/1997 and 359/1997 that had introduced a specific category of permits have been repealed according to the article 65 (par.2) of the Law 2910/2001 but they are considered to be important since they firstly inaugurated equal rights and the core of such provisions has been successfully transferred to the Law 2910/2001 (article 39). Finally, Law 1556/1985 on ratification of the International Labour Organisation Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention (No. 159) of 1983 declares the principle of equal opportunities between disabled employees and employees in general and between male and female employees. In addition, under the provisions of Law 2639/1998, employers in breach of the non-discrimination legislation are liable to administrative fines and may be brought to court.

As far as working conditions are concerned, it is worthy to mention that on 17 April 2013 Greek farmers along with their assistants were suspected of shooting and wounding more than 20 migrant workers at a strawberry farm. In particular, the supervisors of the farm were believed to have opened fire at a crowd of about 200 mostly Bangladeshi immigrants who were demanding wages that had not been paid. The wounded were taken to hospital while police said they had arrested the owner of the farm, in the southwestern town of Manolada, and were still hunting the foremen. Seven Bangladeshi workers were still receiving treatment in local hospitals, but none have life-threatening injuries. Before the shootings, there was an altercation between the foreign workers and the three foremen over six months’ outstanding wages. After that, the three foremen left the spot, and returned shortly later holding two shotguns and a handgun, and opened fire on the crowd. The labour minister ordered an urgent inspection of work conditions at the Manolada strawberry farms. However, the country’s main labour union, GSEE, accused the government of failing to properly investigate conditions at Manolada, which it likened to a modern form of slavery. The plastic-topped greenhouses that cover Manolada’s broad plains account for most of Greece’s strawberry output, using cheap labour by Asian immigrants often housed in primitive conditions. There have been several attacks on migrant strawberry workers in recent years, but the recent incident was the worst so far. Local authorities have proved unwilling to investigate all the previous incidents, since exploitation of migrants labour force is associated with economic interests of a part of the local society. The criminal act in Manolada shows the tragic results of labour exploitation, combined with a lack of control by the governmental Labour Inspectorate Body. As a result, in Manolada, and particularly in the strawberry plantations, a sort of state within a state has been created. Political parties, NGOs and trade unions expressed shock, and about 100 people took part in a protest by labour groups outside the Labour Ministry in Athens. According to the Greek section of the Doctors of the World medical aid group, the protracted financial crisis, combined with a constantly growing mood of xenophobia and tolerance for racist violence, is leading to incidents of barbarity and brutality that insult Greece. The phenomenon of extreme exploitation of migrants labour force in Manolada is due to strong financial benefits of Greek employers who want to produce big quantities of strawberries at a very low cost. In addition, having takein into consideration the incident of Manolada, the Council of Europe’s Commissioner for Human Rights, Nils Muiznieks, said after visiting Greece in 2013 that he was seriously concerned about a rise in racist violence and urged authorities to get tougher. It is noteworthy that no such incidents of extreme labour exploitation concerning Greek workers take place even if they are uninsured or in a weak and insecure position, which shows a blatant discrimination against workers of different ethnic origin on behalf of employers.

As far as dismissals are concerned, in early September 2013, three employees of the Municipality of Glyfada who used to clean public schools were informed on the first day of school that their contracts were not to be renewed. The explanation given to the school directors by the Municipality of Glyfada was that “they are aliens; we will bring our people in order to give work to the people of Glyfada”. The employees, two men and one woman of Albanian descent, have lived for many years legally in Greece and had been working at the schools in question between 6 and 14 years, being, as generally admitted, exceptional at their job. The unilateral decision of the municipality, to which other political groups were opposed, was also met with critical reactions by the union of parents and teachers. Finally, after relevant recommendations sent by the public Organisation of Youth and Lifelong Learning to the school committees for the immediate employment of cleaning staff, the Municipality changed its stance, and called urgently its representatives to renew the contracts of the three foreigners. The element that shows the discriminatory character in this case is the explanation that was given by the Municipality since their interest for the disadvantaged citizens seems to constitute a pretext, as their argument itself makes an artificial juxtaposition of the poor Greeks who deserve to be protected unlike the poor non Greeks who do not deserve such a protection.

3.2.4 Access to all types and to all levels of vocational guidance, vocational training, advanced vocational training and retraining, including practical work experience (Article 3(1)(b))

Does national law on discrimination include access to guidance and training as defined and formulated in the directives? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is discrimination regarding working conditions dealt with in any other legislation?

Note that there is an overlap between ‘vocational training’ and ‘education’. For example, university courses have been treated as vocational training in the past by the Court of Justice. Other courses, especially those taken after leaving school, may fall into this category. Does national law on discrimination apply to vocational training outside the employment relationship, such as that provided by technical schools or universities, or such as adult lifelong learning courses? If not does any other legislation do so?

68 http://www.efsyn.gr/?p=116160
Yes, national law on discrimination includes access to guidance and training as defined and formulated in the directives.

According to article 4(1)(b):

1. Without prejudice to paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this article, and to Article 9, the principle of equal treatment, as established in this law, shall apply to all persons, as regards both the public and private sectors, including public bodies, in relation to:
   (b) access to all types and to all levels of vocational guidance, vocational training, advanced vocational training and retraining, including practical work experience.

There is no indication for the extent of the application of the Law 3304/2005 in regard to technical schools, universities, adult life-long learning courses etc.

Nevertheless, the anti-discrimination law must be interpreted in the light of EU law and the Greek Constitution. In addition, under Article 16(7) of the Greek Constitution, technical schools, universities or adult life-long learning courses are under the protection of the State.

This law (1414/1984) and most of its provisions, including restriction of scope to the private sector, seem to have been replaced by Law 3488/2006 on the ‘Implementation of the principle of equal treatment of men and women regarding access to employment, vocational training and promotion, terms and conditions of work’. 69 The Law 3488/2006 on the implementation of the principle of sex equality in employment relations and other provisions combating sex discrimination in occupation and employment, vocational training, access to occupation, restricts the scope of these laws to persons who work in the private sector.

Law 2956/2001 on Restructuring the Manpower Organisation (OAED) provides for the vocational training of disabled persons.

Articles 9 and 10 of Law 2224/1994, ensures access by nationals of other Contracting Parties to all vocational guidance and training programmes run by OAED.

3.2.5 Membership of, and involvement in, an organisation of workers or employers, or any organisation whose members carry on a particular profession, including the benefits provided for by such organisations (Article 3(1)(d))

Does national law on discrimination include membership of, and involvement in workers or employers’ organisations as defined and formulated in the directives? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

In relation to paragraphs 3.2.6 – 3.2.10 you should focus on how discrimination based on racial or ethnic origin is covered by national law, but you should also mention if the law extends to other grounds.

Yes, national law on discrimination includes membership of, and involvement in workers or employers’ organisations as defined and formulated in the directives.

In regard to its scope, Law 3304/2005 adopts almost literally Article 3 of The Framework Directive:

1. Without prejudice to paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this article, and to Article 9, the principle of equal treatment, as established in this law, shall apply to all persons, as regards both the public and private sectors, including public bodies, in relation to:

   (d) membership of, and involvement in, an organisation of workers or employers, or any organisation whose members carry on a particular profession, including the benefits provided for by such organisations.

In addition to Law 3304/2005, Law 1426/1984 on the ratification of the European Social Charter recognises and prohibits any discrimination on the grounds of membership of and activity in trade unions or employers’ or employees’ organisations.

Article 7(1) of Law 1264/1982 provides for the right of aliens legally employed in Greece to be members of professional associations of any kind. Until recently, problems had been experienced with the right of alien workers to establish themselves and join direct professional associations. According to Article 107 of the Introductory Law of the Civil Code, executive board members of non-profit associations (‘somateia’) are to be Greek nationals.

The restrictive nature of this antiquated provision was supported by case-law, but this is no longer true.

Modern case-law interprets the provision in conjunction with Article 11 of the European Convention on Human Rights (freedom of association) and Article 14 of the same Convention (non-discrimination clause).

3.2.6 Social protection, including social security and healthcare (Article 3(1)(e) Directive 2000/43)

Does national law on discrimination cover social protection, including social security and healthcare? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

In relation to religion or belief, age, disability and sexual orientation, does national law seek to rely on the exception in Article 3(3), Directive 2000/78?

National law on discrimination covers social protection, including social security and healthcare as far as racial / ethnic origin is concerned.

Article 4 of Law 3304/2005 again literally adopts the Racial Equality Directive wording here, and only in relation to racial or ethnic origin discrimination — ‘social protection including social security and healthcare, social advantages, education, access to and supply of goods and services which are available to the public, including housing.’

We must emphasise that regular insurance risks are considered to be sickness, maternity, disability, industrial injury or disease, old age, death of a family protector, lack of housing, and the destruction of agricultural production. With regard to healthcare, the Greek Constitution, as amended in April 2001, provides that ‘all persons’ have the right to health protection (Article 5(5)).

Social care is the subject of Law 2646/1998 on the development of the national system of social care. According to this law, social care means ‘protection provided to persons or groups through programmes of prevention and rehabilitation and aims at creating the conditions for equal participation by these persons in economic and social life and safeguards their decent standard of living’.

According to Article 1(2) of Law 2646/1998, ‘social care’ involves state responsibility, and according to this law every person legally residing in Greece who is in an emergency situation is entitled to social care from the institutions of the national system.

Article 3(3) of the same law expressly provides that social care services are provided without any distinction, according to the particular personal, family, economic and social needs of the beneficiaries.

It is noteworthy to mention that in early 2013 civil society organisations regarded as discriminatory a measure that had been introduced by the Greek Government concerning the imposition of double charges at Greek Public Hospitals on all non-Greeks. In specific, through a common Ministerial Act entered into force on November 23, 2012, all non-permanent foreign residents, both from the EU and third countries, must pay 2.09 times more than Greek patients. This has caused many problems particularly for immigrant women that wanted to give birth. In one instance a women of Albanian ethnicity gave birth at a Public Hospital and, not being able to pay, had to find a relative to sign a guarantee. What is more, doctors were called upon to report any undocumented immigrants to the relative authorities. Furthermore, there have been reports of raids by Golden Dawn members at Hospitals targeted against immigrant patient and personnel. Therefore, in January 2013 the Greek Forum of Migrants, the Greek Council for Refugees, and the Union of Hospital Doctors of Athens and Piraeus, together with fifteen doctors brought an action for annulment to the Council of State, which is the Supreme Administrative Court in Greece, challenging the cancellation of the Ministerial Decision which stipulates that charge for medical services for citizens who are not permanent residents in Greece, such as tourists (including EU citizens) may be charged double time compared to Greek citizens. According to the applicants, provision of health services is differentiated in contravention with Articles 2, 5, 21, 25 and 43 of the Greek Constitution, Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights and Article 21 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The case is still pending.

3.2.7 Social advantages (Article 3(1)(f) Directive 2000/43)

Does national law on discrimination cover social advantages? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

This covers a broad category of benefits that may be provided by either public or private actors to people because of their employment or residence status, for example reduced rate train travel for large families, child birth grants, funeral grants and discounts on access to municipal leisure facilities. It may be difficult to give an exhaustive analysis of whether this category is fully covered in national law, but you should indicate whether national law explicitly addresses the category of ‘social advantages’ or if discrimination in this area is likely to be unlawful.

National law on discrimination covers social advantages as far as racial / ethnic origin is concerned.

The category of ‘social advantages’ is not often explicitly addressed in Greek law and when it is, it is generally and broadly defined; Law 139/1975 on the status quo of persons without nationality, for example, explicitly addresses the term of ‘social advantages’. In this context this term covers housing, the supply of goods with coupons, as well as public education and care, and even the entirety of labour law protection and social security.

Reduced-rate train travel or reduced bus fares for large families are granted to all persons (multi-member families), regardless of their racial or ethnic origin, on the legal basis of Law 3304/2005, as well as on the general constitutional principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination. In other words, only racial or ethnic origin benefits from protection in the field of social protection.

In early 2013, the Ministry of Health & Social Solidarity along with the National Confederation of Persons with Disability as a main coordinator, presented the accomplishment of a project that had been implemented at national level under the name “Gradual re-inclusion of persons with disabilities in the socio-economic life and promotion in autonomous life.”

The project was co-financed by the European Social Fund and national funds and it concerns the implementation of organised activities that include expression, recreation (e.g. theatre performances, sports, music, dance, involvement in various forms of arts, etc), psychological development and physical exercise for persons with disabilities who live in various forms of special units / institutions or in family.

The aim of the project consisted not only in the development of their capacity for individual or collective activities, in the improvement of their quality of life, but also in teaching them how to take advantage of their free time and, finally, in supporting their families so that they could face in an efficient way all phenomena of social exclusion. Moreover, the project includes the edition of a “Guide of Accessible Recreative Activities” in Greece, which includes an overall registration of all accessible infrastructures (hotels, transport, sports facilities, restaurants / cafe, theatres, cinemas, commercial centres, and public services such as Municipalities, Hospitals and local medical units) that exist in the capital cities of all Prefectures and generally in all the biggest cities of the country. The purpose of the Guide is to inform persons with disabilities for all choices of transport and recreation that could make their free time worthy.

3.2.8 Education (Article 3(1)(g) Directive 2000/43)

Does national law on discrimination cover education? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

This covers all aspects of education, including all types of schools. Please also consider cases and/or patterns of segregation and discrimination in schools, affecting notably the Roma community and people with disabilities. If these cases and/or patterns exist, please refer also to relevant legal/political discussions that may exist in your country on the issue.

Please briefly describe the general approach to education for children with disabilities in your country, and the extent to which mainstream education and segregated “special” education are favoured and supported.

Yes, national law on discrimination covers education on ethnic / racial origin.

1. Aliens

Article 4 of Law 3304/2005 includes the field of education, but only in respect of race and ethnic origin, as required by the Racial Equality Directive. There is no explicit provision prohibiting discrimination in the field of access to education on the grounds of religion or other belief, age, disability or sexual orientation.

The right of alien residents to education was also enshrined for the first time in Article 40 of Law 2910/2001 on entry and residence of aliens in Greek territory. According to this provision, minor aliens residing in Greece are subject to the same compulsory (primary and secondary) education of nine years as Greek nationals are (Article 16(3) of the Constitution).

Article 40(4) provides for the promulgation of interministerial decisions to regulate the ‘optional teaching’ in schools of ‘mother tongue and culture’ to minor students, if there is a sufficient number of these. To date, no such interministerial decision has been signed.

However, the total exclusion by Greek law of non-Orthodox teachers from single-post state schools is in flagrant contravention of Article 13(1) of the Greek Constitution, a fact that was expressly recognised by Greek jurisprudence in 2002. The Greek Council of State has rightly stressed that the appointment of a Greek citizen to a state post, such as that of a state schoolteacher, is a political right that is to be enjoyed without any discrimination based on religious belief.

In its third report in 2009, ECRI strongly recommended that the Greek authorities foster equal opportunities in access to education for children from minority groups by organising, inter alia, support courses of Greek language, backup courses, and mother tongue education for the children concerned.

In May 2011 the Deputy Minister of Education excluded from the special categories of candidates for higher education aliens and aliens of non-Greek origin attending Greek schools in Greece. The Greek Ombudsman by letter addressed to the Minister argued that “the sudden abrogation of regulations concerning the inclusion of some candidates in a special category, - which allows for a broader choice of educational institutions, overturns the basis upon which the entire planning of specific candidates was premised (such as the choice of subjects in February 2011 on which they will be examined), thus undermining their right to access higher education in accordance with article 16 of the Greek Constitution”. He requested that the Ministerial Decision becomes effective for the exams of 2012. The request was not accepted by the Ministry.

On 23 May 2013, after the submission of a complaint by six former military officers and one civilian, the Council of State, which is the Supreme Administrative Court of Greece, is called to decide if military schools can accept candidates that have Greek citizenship but are not of Greek ethnic descent. The claimants ask for the annulment of the 2011 decisions of the Minister of Defense, which allowed candidates that had Greek citizenship but were not of Greek ethnic descent, to take part in the military schools’ entry exams, claiming them to be anti-constitutional and illegal. The military officers claim that according to Articles 4 and 110 of the Constitution, the attendance of military schools by those who have Greek citizenship without being of Greek ethnic descent is excluded. They also claim that it violates the Regulation of the “Evelpidon” Military School of Greece, according to which only those of Greek ethnic descent have the right to participate in the exams. However, the abolition of the supplementary condition of Greek ethnic descent for the admission to the armed forces’ schools, had occurred after the insistent written critical remarks of the Greek Ombudsman that the then legislative framework was grossly anti-constitutional.

There is no information about the time that the Court will issue its decision.

It is noteworthy that on 25 February 2013, eighty-four MPs of the ruling party had submitted an amendment to a draft bill, according to which only persons of Greek ethnic descent and not only of Greek citizenship should be admitted in military, police, and coast guard schools. After the reactions of the major opposition, but also of two other parties that belonged to the government coalition, this amendment had been withdrawn.

78 The justification report of this amendment stated among others: “Due to the particularity of our national defense issues, in comparison to other European countries, and also due to the grave problem of irregular migration that the country is facing, and in connection with the law regarding citizenship and its consequences, it would be appropriate to reinstate the condition of Greek ethnic descent, as an eligibility criterion, for all the military and police schools”.

MIGRATION POLICY GROUP
2. Roma

In its third report in 2009, ECRI notes with concern that Roma remain at a great disadvantage with regard to education. There were – and there are - still cases of schools refusing to register Roma children for attendance, in some instances due to pressure by some non-Roma parents. ECRI is deeply worried by the fact that there are also cases of Roma children being separated from other children within the same school or in the vicinity thereof. The absence of disaggregated data on the situation of Roma pupils makes any in-depth assessment of their situation and the ability to devise specific programmes targeting this group difficult. ECRI urges the Greek authorities to strengthen measures taken to address problems faced by Roma children in education including exclusion, discrimination and under-performance, among others, in full compliance with the European Court of Human Rights’ judgement in this regard as well as ECRI’s General Policy Recommendation No. 10 on combating racism and racial discrimination in and through school education. ECRI further recommends that the authorities take a comprehensive approach to addressing these problems, including through the Inter-Ministerial Committee dealing with Roma issues.

In general, the persistent housing problems and employment and social protection problems of the Roma appear to constitute the most crucial factors for improving the situation in education.

Despite efforts there have been incidents of Roma exclusion from education, while the State has taken no action against such racist attitudes and exclusion of children from education, often incited or tolerated by local administration officials.

A typical case of inertia on the part of the state educational authorities in guaranteeing the access of Roma children to schools is a case reported by the Greek Ombudsman.

In this case, the intervention of the Ombudsman, in coordination with the university project manager, was necessary in order for a third public body (the Earthquake Support Service of the Ministry for the Environment, Physical Planning and Public Works) to provide prefabricated classrooms to an elementary school in the Peloponnese. Until then, Roma children were excluded from the school on the grounds that the building facilities were insufficient.

On 11th December 2012, in the case Ioanna Sampani and Others v. Greece,80 filed by 140 Roma (98 children and 42 parents) through the NGO human rights organisation Greek Helsinki Monitor (GHM), the European Court of Human Rights ruled that there was evidence of a practice of discrimination under Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights in conjunction with Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, since it was found out that the operation of the school between 2008 and 2010 had resulted in further discrimination against the applicants. The application concerned the continuing racist educational segregation of Roma children to a Roma-only ghetto school, namely the 12th Elementary School of Aspropyrgos. This segregation takes place despite the 5 June 2008 judgment in the Case of Sampanis and Others v. Greece, when the EctHR found Greece in violation of the Convention regarding the initial school exclusion of Roma children living in the Psari settlement of Aspropyrgos and subsequently their segregation to a ghetto school (an annex of the 10th Elementary School of Aspropyrgos). Following the EctHR judgment, the Ministry of Education had renamed the 10th Elementary School of Aspropyrgos annex as 12th Elementary School of Aspropyrgos so that Greece could claim before international fora that no school segregation takes place anymore.

The Lavida and others v. Greece judgment issued in May 2013 concerned the segregation through 2013 of all Roma pupils in Sofades in one ghetto school with the non-Roma pupils attending two other schools. The applicants asked for the desegregation of the Sofades (Thessaly) school system so that all three schools have a mixed Roma and non-Roma pupil population, but the authorities refused to do that: they just moved to the two other schools, in an arbitrary way, the few applicant children still of primary school age, leaving in the ghetto school the large number (in the hundreds) of all other Roma pupils. Several questions had been tabled to Parliament by opposition MPs on the implementation of these judgments.

It is noteworthy that this was the third European Court ruling on segregation involving Greek schools, which means that despite three separate relevant European Court rulings up to the end of 2013, Greece has failed to change its ongoing discrimination against Romani schoolchildren and the flagrant violation of their right to education.

At the same time, all around Greece, Roma pupils attend regular schools but with a high dropout rate. Two government reports on Western Greece and on Eastern Macedonia and Thrace have provided telling data for scores of Roma communities in these regions. Additionally, a series of parliamentary questions have reminded the government that Spata Roma have been excluded from the local school since 2011. These are Roma who moved to an area of Attica (outside of Athens) called Spata from the island of Crete and other areas and they do not constitute a special group of Roma. In all cases the government does not take any action other the issuing circulars about the importance to secure Roma pupils’ attendance.

On 22th February 2011 the Deputy Prosecutor of the Greek Supreme Court, after having received a letter (16 February 2011) on behalf of the “Coordinated Organisations and Communities for Roma Human Rights in Greece” (SOKADRE) asking him to investigate thoroughly its cases of educational exclusion of marginalisation of Roma children in “school –ghettos” it has repeatedly and substantially denounced, alleging with a violation of the law as well as of several previous circulars and other clear instructions from the Prosecution Office of the Supreme Court itself, had issued a relevant “Urgent Written Order” (with Protocol Number 720 /22-02-2011) addressed to all local prosecutors of Greece.\(^83\) According to his above Order, the Deputy Prosecutor of the Greek Supreme Court officially asked from all local prosecutors of Greece to “take care of striking the phenomenon of exclusion of Roma from the public educational system of Greece, in a way that any phobic attitude towards Roma children should be eliminated and that their unhindered equal - without exclusion and discrimination - integration to all structures of the State should be ensured”.

Therefore, it is noteworthy that although the above document (“Order”) of the Prosecution does not refer strictly to the specific provisions of the Greek anti-discrimination legislation, there is no doubt that at least this concrete judicial authority has fully realised the tremendous importance of the enforcement of the existing legal framework against discrimination.

On 2 April 2012 the vice-president of the EU Commission and Commissioner responsible for justice, fundamental rights and citizenship Viviane Reding gave on behalf of the Commission an official answer to the Greek MEP Nikos Chrysogelos who had submitted on 13 February 2012 a parliamentary question for written answer to the Commission, raising the issue of education of Roma children in the Prefecture of Karditsa and asking if some relevant announcements by the Ministry of Education were in line with the objectives of the ‘Europe 2020’ strategy for the elimination of school exclusion for Roma children.\(^84\) The facts were the following: in its document to the Directorate of Primary Education of the Prefecture of Karditsa, dated from 23 December 2011, the Ministry of Education expressed its concern over “the concentration of Roma pupils in specific primary schools of the Prefecture of Karditsa, especially after the Lavida appeal against Greece before the ECtHR (European Court of Human Rights), proposing the dispersion of the Roma pupils at those schools to other primary schools in the area. However, on 26 January 2012, following opposition by a section of the local community on the grounds that these changes were being made in the middle of the school year, the Ministry issued a press release(4) deciding the following: (a) The 4th Primary School of Sofades will continue to operate, without any mention being made of the proposed dispersion of pupils to other schools, causing justifiable concern that the school will continue operating as a ghetto school exclusively with Roma pupils, (b) the transfer of only nine 1st grade pupils to the 1st and 2nd primary schools and their inclusion in reception classes, which will, however, operate outside the premises of those schools, (c) the enrolment of pupils of the 5th kindergarten for the school year 2012-

2013 in local schools at a percentage not exceeding 20% of the school population, which suggests the possible use of racial criteria in the children's enrolment. In her answer, the Commissioner highlighted that the Racial Equality Directive prohibits direct and indirect discrimination based on racial or ethnic origin, inter alia in education. Greece has transposed this directive into national legislation. It is therefore for the national courts, in the light of all the facts of a case, to determine whether a concrete situation constitutes discrimination. Furthermore, the Commissioner replied that a key objective of the Greek ESF operational programme ‘Education and Lifelong Learning’ is to reinforce access and participation of all in education, that the programme supports a preventive integrated action aiming at combating early school leaving of groups with cultural specificities, including the Roma, and that the action comprises a wide array of needs-based interventions, including reinforced access to early childhood education, additional pedagogical and psycho-social support, and targeted teacher training. Moreover, the Commissioner pointed out that the Commission shares the analysis of the honourable Member that measures taken in this case do not go far enough towards effective desegregation although they reflect some will to address the issue.

The Department of Primary Education (ΠΤΔΕ) of Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (ΑΠΘ) implemented in 2013 a programme entitled “Education of Roma children in the Regions of Central Macedonia, Western Macedonia, Eastern Macedonia and Thrace.” A similar programme is implemented in the National Kapodistrian University of Athens (ΕΚΠΑ). The programmes aim to enhance the Roma children’s access to preschool education and ensure afterwards their in-time enrolment in the first grade of primary school, familiarise them with school and staying in it throughout, at least, the duration of compulsory education. In particular, the early school leaving in Roma amounts to 77%, based on the most recent recording. Eight out of ten Roma children leave school before completing elementary education.

The objectives of the programmes are supported through a series of actions including intervention in Roma settlements by qualified psychologists and social scientists, psycho-social family support, tutoring courses for covering knowledge gaps of children, in and out of school interventions in order to enhance children’s interest for learning through their active involvement in a number of activities. In addition, the programmes include a series of actions addressed to teachers and education officials, aiming at sensitizing and informing them on matters relating to educational best practices for this particular group but also with regard to supporting their teaching work under highly demanding and challenging conditions, as those prevailing in Roma children ‘s education. The actions of the programmes are also addressed to the extended community demanding the elimination of prejudices and the reduction of the social stigma accompanying the target population.

In addition, after a relevant parliamentarian question submitted in July 2013, the competent Ministry of Development declared on 6 August 2013 that the Operational Project “Education and Learning for Life”, subsidised by EU funds, aims at strengthening the access of Roma children at the pre-school education and subsequently their timely registration in the first grade of the primary school so that they could be adjusted in the educational system and be able to finish at least the obligatory studies. The schools are integrated.

3. Turks

In September 2012, when the 2012-2013 school year started, 20 children belonging to the Turkish Minority of Western Thrace in Echinos village, Xanthi had not been enrolled in primary schools for minority pupils by the principal on the ground that those children did not attend kindergarten. Their parents stated that they preferred not to send their children to public kindergarten, where the language of education is only Greek. However, the Turkish Muslim Principal of the Minority School, Hasan Kurak, allowed the attendance of the children to lessons. Further to the intervention of the vice-president of the Echinos Turkish Minority Primary School council, a Greek Orthodox who alerted the school inspection that the concerned children had not attended kindergarten before, the principal had been referred to the disciplinary board of the Education Department of the local District by the state inspector of the Ministry of Education and penalized with an administrative warning. Act 3518/2006 (Article 73) envisages the extension of compulsory period in education from nine to ten years since the school year 2007-2008. Before that, children were allowed to be enrolled without previous attendance in kindergarten. Although the Turkish minority is granted the right to establish, maintain and manage its own educational institutions that provide education in Turkish language, minority children who have turned 5 have to attend majority kindergartens under the Ministry of Education where the language of education is Greek. The law does not establish bilingual lessons for children with ethnic and cultural differences such as minority children. It is noteworthy that the 1923 Treaty of Lausanne (Article 40) provides that members of the Muslim minority have the right to establish, manage and control their own schools, and to use their own language freely. Article 30 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child stipulates that in the states where ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, a child belonging to such a minority shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, to use his or her own language. After a resolution from the local Municipality of Myki, on 12 October 2012, asking from the public prosecutor to intervene in that case, the latter ordered an investigation in order to find out eventual responsibilities for the non-enrolment of children, since primary education is compulsory in Greece.

86 Parliamentarian Question No 108/ 24-7-2013.
4. Children with disabilities

Law 2817/2000, relating to education for children with disabilities, mandates the free education of children with special needs in kindergartens, and elementary and secondary level schools and educational institutions in different curriculum models. The structure of education for individuals with disabilities in Greece, as well as the legal definition of Adapted Physical Education, is included in this law.

This law mandates the education of these individuals in public schools, in special schools and in vocational schools at elementary and secondary level. Education in public schools can be offered in at least four settings:

1) In inclusive classes within public schools. In this environment, children with disabilities have to be evaluated before their entrance by a group of specialists (elementary school teacher, secondary school teacher, psychologist, medical doctor);
2) In special classes within public schools;
3) In special classes within hospitals/institutions;
4) At the home of the student with special needs.

In Greece there are separate public schools for certain categories of persons with disabilities. These are elementary and secondary schools for deaf children, elementary and secondary schools for the blind, and elementary and secondary school for blind children with cerebral palsy.

According to Law 2817/2000 on education for children with disabilities, the rule (the preference) for these groups of pupils is mainstream education and the exception (in very special cases) is segregated education. The latter is not regarded as discriminatory.

The above legal framework has been completed with the new Law 3699/2008 on “Special Education of individuals with disability or special educational needs”.

The aim of the Law consists in guaranteeing to all children with disability their right to education and social and professional integration, along with equal opportunities for full participation and contribution in the society. Special education is defined as an integrated part of the overall public free education at every level (pre-school, primary school, high school). The stage of diagnosis is strictly included in the system of special education. The special educational needs of disabled children are “located”, searched and verified by public bodies called “Centres of Special Committees for Evaluation and Diagnosis”, subjected to the Ministry of Education and consisted of a variety of specialised scientists who play a key role in the accommodation (article 4). These Centres are authorised to suggest individualised projects for pedagogical and psychological support of the children and to recommend in which exact school units they have to register. They also provide advisory support to the staff of the schools if necessary, they supervise the school work of the pupils and they designate their skills, they define the specific educational and technical equipment that is required for the educational needs of the children, they take care of possibly constant medical support for children who need it during the school hours, they propose suitable methods of teaching and evaluation of the pupils by taking into consideration their different kinds of disability and they write reports for each person.

As for enrollment in Universities, there are no uniform rules governing admissions procedures for people with disabilities. Law 3794 / 2009 (Article 35) does say that the 5% of the top achievers with disabilities may apply for a course of their choice without sitting examinations, but the decision on whether to accept them rests with each department.

There are no statistics available on education for children with disabilities.

On 25\textsuperscript{th} March 2011, at the occasion of the public celebration of the national holiday of the 25\textsuperscript{th} of March (anniversary of Greece’s independence), the Principal and the gym teacher of the 25\textsuperscript{th} Primary School of Larissa were reported in the media to have deprived a student with Down syndrome of his right to parade (a right enshrined in the Constitutional provision as referred to below), and they did not change their decision even when the boy started crying as he felt excluded.\textsuperscript{88} In particular, before the march they asked his parents to submit an official medical certificate stating that the disabled boy had the capacity to walk in line with the other students. The parents refused to submit such a document, claiming that there was no need to do so since the gym teacher would be all the time next to the students’ group during the parade. However, the Principal and the gym teacher insisted on their initial decision by arguing that if the boy paraded he would suffer high emotional stress, which would be harmful for him. In the expert’s opinion, although there is no specific law regulating the particular issue of access of disabled persons to educational activities such as school parades, the above practice of the specific school contradicts Article 21, par. 6 of the Greek Constitution, which stipulates that “people with disabilities have the right to benefit from measures ensuring their self-sufficiency, professional integration and participation in the social, economic and political life”.

The incident revealed the existence of a discriminatory attitude of some teachers towards disabled children and therefore it was heavily criticised by the vast majority of Greek media and public opinion. Nevertheless, such discrimination constitutes a rather rare case within Greek society because discrimination against disabled people in Greece seems to occur less often than against other vulnerable groups such as migrants, etc, although in the past there was a lack of reporting compared to the present, as far as cases of disability are concerned. There are no statistics but this conclusion arises from the fact that there are not many reports concerning such cases. In the author’s opinion, if such incidents happened more often they would be publicised.

On 3 August 2012 the National Confederation of Disabled People (N.C.D.P.) sent a letter to the Minister of Education regarding the exclusion of a student with a disability from a university department.\(^89\) Ms. K. referred to Article 35 of Act 3794/2009\(^90\) regarding regulations concerning the university and technological sector of higher education and other provisions*, according to which candidates with specific disabilities included in the list in para. 1 are admitted to higher educational institutions without taking any exam in application to the numerous clausus rules in excess of the existing fixed number (“numerus clausus”) of admissions by 5%. She informed the N.C.D.P. that she could not be admitted to the Department of Foreign Languages, Translation and Interpretation (Specialization Spanish Language and Culture) of the Ionian University as she wished to, because students with physical disabilities were not accepted, given that the premises were not accessible to students with physical disabilities. Furthermore, according to the N.C.D.P., the absence of facilities contravened not only Article 21 par. 6 of the Greek Constitution, which strictly provides that the State must take care of people with disabilities, but also to Article 24 of the U.N. International Convention for the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, that has been recently ratified by Act 4074/2012. At this moment there is no information regarding the next steps or for any possible legal claim. The Ministry has no responded so far and no measures have been taken to solve the problem.

5. Persons of the LGBT community

A case of discriminatory behaviour towards a transgender student took place in 2013. The Greek Ombudsman intervened and issued a Recommendation\(^91\) to the School’s Board to accept that: a) she can use the name she desires in her relations with her peers and teachers, b) to dress according to her gender identity, as long as she keeps within the limits of decency that apply to the other girls as well, and c) to use the women’s resting room. This Recommendation however, until date, has not been implemented. In general, teachers often report cases of bullying in schools on grounds of sexual orientation.\(^92\)

In March 2013, in a common press release, nineteen NGOs that deal with LGBT issues reported a case of serious discrimination on grounds of gender identity\(^93\) on behalf of a representative of the Observatory on the Prevention of Violence and Bullying in Schools,\(^94\) run by the Ministry of Education. A possibly offensive discriminatory behaviour of a public figure of the Ministry of Education who refused to meet an LGBT delegation if a trans woman would be included is seriously questioning how the existing governmental Observatory on the Prevention of Violence and Bullying in Schools operates, even though civil society initially hailed it as a promising new institution. The Observatory started its operation in the beginning of 2013 and one of its duties is to carry out a record system on all violent acts perpetrated on school grounds, including racist violence and to issue directives on their suppression. The Greek Ombudsman is also active in this respect.

The activities of the Observatory are implemented under the responsibility of the Regional Directorates of Primary and Secondary Education. The Observatory for the development of its activities is supported by both the Steering Committee and the Central Scientific Committee. The establishment of this Observatory constitutes a very important and useful initiative, since for instance, an initial research carried out in 2013 by the Observatory on Violence and Bullying in Schools showed that one third of violent incidents recorded (32.23%), was carried out based on racial or ethnic origin and 10.93% of recorded incidents were targeted against minorities.

Many stakeholders have highlighted the importance of combating racism at schools and promoting educational and informative schemes on this regard. Furthermore, an initiative like this will be helpful for the social integration of students belonging to minority groups. Therefore, although the official positive position of the Greek Ministry of Education is to prevent and combat school violence and bullying, by reporting and publishing reports of discriminatory and violent incidents at school, on grounds of sexual identity, it turned out to be that some of its officers are dismayed and negative at the prospect of meeting a representative from the trans community. This incident was believed to be a serious case of discrimination on grounds of gender identity, since this kind of behaviour has been regarded by the civil society organisations as transphobic and in effect contrary and negatory to the goals of the Ministry of Education Observatory for the Prevention of School Violence and Bullying.

6. Religion

During the period of 2008-2013 there was an issue concerning the exemption from the course on religion taught in Greek Schools— which covers the teachings of the Greek Orthodox religion. Three Ministerial Circulars were issued. However, the regulation of the exemption process was not carried out in a single and consistent manner: the right to exemption is only recognised for those students of no faith, of a different religion or a different dogma and as long as there were reasons pertaining to their religious conscious that were invoked either by them or their parents. In other words, the student has to provide a justification for being exempted.

In September 2013, this led to the introduction of a new Circular that requested the 3.2.9 Access to and supply of goods and services which are available to the public (Article 3(1)(h) Directive 2000/43)

Does national law on discrimination cover access to and supply of goods and services? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

a) Does the law distinguish between goods and services available to the public (e.g. in shops, restaurants, banks) and those only available privately (e.g. limited to members of a private association)? If so, explain the content of this distinction.

Article 4 of Law 3304/2005 includes the field of discrimination in ‘access to and supply of goods and services which are available to the public, including housing’, but only in respect of race and ethnic origin, as required by the Racial Equality Directive. It adopted the same wording as the Racial Equality Directive.

It is noteworthy to mention that on 10 April 2013 a bus driver of the private “Urban Transport Organisation of the city of Thessaloniki” (O.A.S.TH), acting in a provocative manner, made two passengers of African descent to get off the vehicle.\footnote{http://www.unhcr.gr/1againstracism/golden-dawner-bus-driver-kicks-immigrants-out-of-the-bus/.} The two passengers had just gotten on the bus, and they were obviously about to buy a ticket. When the other passengers started talking about the incident criticizing the driver’s behaviour, the latter stopped the vehicle and, addressed them in an intense tone, declaring unambiguously that he was a neo-nazi Golden Dawn party supporter. Eleven volunteer lawyers of the local NGO “NAFTHA” (“Nazi-Free Thessaloniki Assembly”) sent a document to the Greek Ombudsman, after the submission of a complaint by a witness who was present at the incident, in order for the Equality Body to be informed, and to intervene in accordance with its competence as provided by Law 3304/2005, by finding that an incident of discrimination took place and publishing its findings. The case is under investigation on behalf of the Ombudsman. Moreover, the administration of OASTH brought also the case before the competent Disicplinary Body of the organisation, where it is still pending. According to members of NAFTHA, there have been recently several similar cases of racist behaviour in the bus services of Thessaloniki.

b) Does the law allow for differences in treatment on the grounds of age and disability in the provision of financial services? If so, does the law impose any Limitations on how age or disability should be used in this context, e.g. does the assessment of risk have to be based on relevant and accurate actuarial or statistical data?

According to Article 11(2) of the anti-discrimination law, Law 3304/2005:

The fixing for occupational social security schemes of ages for admission or entitlement to retirement or invalidity benefits, including the fixing under those schemes of different ages for employees or groups or categories of employees, and the use, in the context of such schemes, of age criteria in actuarial calculations, does not constitute discrimination on the grounds of age, provided this does not result in discrimination on the grounds of sex.

Nevertheless, the law does not impose any limitation.

3.2.10 Housing (Article 3(1)(h) Directive 2000/43)

Does national law on discrimination cover housing? In case national anti-discrimination law does not do so, is it dealt with in any other legislation?

To which aspects of housing does the law apply? Are there any exceptions? Please also consider cases and patterns of housing segregation and discrimination against the Roma and other minorities or groups, and the extent to which the law requires or promotes the availability of housing which is accessible to people with disabilities and older people.

Article 4 of Law 3304/2005 includes the field of ‘access to and supply of goods and services which are available to the public, including housing’, but only in respect of race and ethnic origin, as required by the Racial Equality Directive.

According to Article 21(4) of the Greek Constitution, ‘the acquisition of a home by the homeless or those inadequately sheltered shall constitute an object of special State care’. Also, Article 9 of Greek Constitution provides, without making any differentiation on reasons of racial or ethnic origin or other grounds, that:

1. Every person’s home is a sanctuary. The private and family life of the individual is inviolable. No home search shall be made, except when and as specified by law and always in the presence of representatives of the judicial power.

2. Violators of the preceding provision shall be punished for violating the home’s asylum and for abuse of power, and shall be liable for full damages to the sufferer, as specified by law.

In Greece there have been so far only two state housing programmes (1997-2001 and 2002-2008) that had set as a target, according to the state planning, to eradicate the problem of homelessness for the Greek Roma. Although the implementation of the projects has been concluded in accordance with their budgetary provisions the improper housing phenomenon still exists for thousands of Roma families.

In order to meet Roma housing demands, identified by the local administration during the period 1997-2001, the Ministry of Interior reports that 17.07 mil. Euros were allocated by the state budget and 1,260 pre-fabricated houses were installed. In the period 2002-2008 90.4 mil euros were allocated for Roma housing projects, including the creation of urban infrastructures. The abovementioned budget referred to the completion of housing developments in Didymoticho (54 houses), Sofades (84 houses), Serres (25 houses) and Menemeni (24 houses). Also 557 pre fabricated houses were allocated in order to replace sacks, tents and other unsuitable Roma residences. Furthermore with the use of housing loans a housing development was created in Metaxades (initially 27 houses, to be expanded with 15 more), and in Kalamata – Birbita area (66 wooden houses). Today, the latter settlement is reportedly run down, with most houses destroyed by the tenants.

During the period 2002-2008, 9,000 housing loans of 60,000 euros each, were offered to Greek Roma living in settlements without proper housing conditions. Under law 2946/2001 this project was a cooperation of the public and private sector with bank offering low cost loans to the Roma and the state acting as guarantor of the installment payments for a period of 22 years. According to the Ministry of Interior, by the April 2009, 6,212 Roma had succeeded in utilizing that option and made a real-estate purchase. A report suggests that the loan applications were 33,000. Still many of the Roma who constructed their own house were unable to follow the urban planning regulations, making them an easy target for lawsuits from the competent urban planning and sanitation authorities.

The geographical distribution of the loans corresponds, more or less, to the concentration of Roma populations around the country. Thus, 20% of the loans have been given in Roma families residing in Attica, 18% in Thessaly, 17% in Central Macedonia, 14.3% in East Macedonia-Thrace, 13.7% in Western Greece, 7.7% in Peloponnesse, 3.8% in Crete, 2.6% in Sterea Ellada and low percentages in the rest of the Peripheries. It is worth mentioning that housing projects of the 1930’s in order to accommodate the Christian population of Turkey, included a number of Roma from the area of Istanbul and Izmir. The Roma populations settled under those conditions are considered today amongst the most integrated (e.g Aghia Varvara municipality).

Housing projects (by the Integrated Action Plan) didn’t include a significant Roma population migrating to Greece in recent years, mainly from Albania. The Greek authorities have been always reluctant in considering resettling solutions, for third country nationals Albanian Roma, mainly fearing reactions of local societies but also due to the lack of legal residence permits of these populations. Nevertheless, although largely illegal in their residence status, these population have been tolerated by the Greek authorities until recently.

The National Strategy Report on Social Protection and Social Inclusion 2006–2008 sought to avoid territorial segregation between immigrants (and other groups with cultural/religious particularities) and the rest of the population through preventive measures, such as improving living conditions in urban areas where these groups are mainly concentrated, resolving housing problems and facilitating their dispersal within the territory. However, an evaluation of the National Strategy Plan observed that ‘given the scarcity of evaluations of the impact of the implemented measures, and knowing that in reality a lot remains to be done to adequately address the issue of improving the situation of Greek Roma, to consider this specific intervention a good practice seems debatable’.

In December 2011, taking into account the shortcomings of the preceding programming period, the Greek National Strategy for Social Integration of Roma 2012-2020 has set the following objectives:

- the systematic and comprehensive inventory and description of the current situation;
- a review of the rationality of the planning priorities, based on the resultsof the aforesaid inventory;
- a redefinition of the priorities on the short-, medium- and long-term levels, based on the existing needs of the target group and the resources (human and financial) available;
- the establishment of an administrative mechanism for the integrated management of the national strategy.

104 RAXEN NFP Greece, KEMO-HLHR (2009) “Thematic study on the housing conditions of Roma and Travellers”.
The primary objective of this Action Plan is to end the social exclusion of the Roma and to create the necessary conditions for the social integration of Roma individuals, whether Greeks or foreigners residing lawfully in Greece. The aforesaid strategic objective is to be served via guaranteed provision of housing, in a way that the needs of the Roma target group for acceptable living conditions can be met.

This objective is to be implemented on a short-term (2012-2016), medium-term (2016-2020) and long-term (2020-..) basis.

The concept of ‘housing’ is a complex one, covering not only the physical structure of the home itself but also technical infrastructures (utility networks, waste management systems and other sanitary provisions, communications networks, transport, management of natural and technological risks and so on), as well as access to social amenities like education, health care, welfare and other services. At the various locations where the Roma live, and depending on the typological classification of the various sites, there are significant planning and land use problems which appear with varying frequency and to varying degrees, affecting a site’s prospects for future integration in the urban fabric, as well as ownership problems and serious gaps in provision of services and technical infrastructure. In light of the above, the measures and actions planned will be designed to promote:

- The ensuring of basic human rights and sanitary conditions;
- Low-cost interventions involving large numbers of individuals Tackling particularly serious problems;
- Upgrading of existing accommodation (i.e. what accommodation meets minimum housing standards);
- Selection of areas with acute housing problems for implementation of model housing solutions.

Some of the proposed measures concerning improvement of infrastructures and living conditions are the following:

- Interventions at old-style encampments, where accommodation is in form of huts and tents, at permanent sites often unsuitable for this use or even hazardous, lacking any water, sewage or power supply, where the accommodation does not provide even the most rudimentary of healthy living conditions;
- Improvement of water/power etc. supply at existing settlements;
- Remodelling of existing settlements Improvement of individual dwellings;
- Restoration/renovation of existing buildings in the existing housing stock;
- Rent subsidies;
- Organisation of encampment infrastructures for temporary settlements.

During the year 2013, only three local strategic plans for action, in the framework of the above National Plan, started being implemented on a pilot basis in the Regions of Eastern Macedonia and Thrace, Thessalia and Western Greece.¹⁰⁹ Their aim consisted in providing basic infrastructures for Roma settlements.

It is noteworthy that a legislative provision amending the Municipal and Communal Code provides for the duty of the municipal authorities to plan and realise integration schemes for Roma people.¹¹⁰

As for the results of the enforcement of this provision, its positive impacts concern mostly the field of Roma’s awareness raising Furthermore, as housing segregation and discrimination against Roma is concerned, according to a research conducted by EU-MIDI, Greece was the EU country where the fewest Roma knew that there are law provisions that forbid discriminations during the leasing or purchase of an apartment (13%). 34% of the Roma have indicated that they have been discriminated in the past 5 years.¹¹¹

Besides that, the only cases and patterns come from the Greek Ombudsman (one of the three Greek equality bodies).

During the last years, the GO’s internet resources have collected and displayed in its thematic web site around 100 press clippings related to cases of discrimination against the Roma, mainly related to spatial segregation. These indicate that in the last year the relations between Roma communities and non-Roma majorities have deteriorated to an unprecedented degree around the country. The worse events have taken place in the town of Etoliko (August 2012) Votanikos (August 2012), Rhodes (2012) and Halandri (October 2012).

In a recent reference to a case of metal theft by unknown perpetrators the head of the regional administration of Peloponnese, pledged for the evacuation of all Roma settlements in that region with the assistance of the police.¹¹²

¹¹⁰ Law 3463/2006, Article 75(1)(e)(5); Official Gazette A 114/08.06.2006; entered into force 01.01.2007.
When the issue of the potential compulsory relocation of Roma from the settlement of Votanikos area (Athens) arose in the mass media and within organisations engaged with these matters, the Greek Ombudsman visited the settlement and proceeded with a series of actions in order to mobilise the competent services.\footnote{113} The Ombudsman recommended that:

\begin{quote}
…special care should be taken and a suitable plot of land with appropriate living conditions should be indicated for the possible relocation of the Roma. Then, the competent Regional General Secretary should take a relevant decision in collaboration with the competent Directorate of the Ministry of the Interior (complaint no. 13986/2006).\footnote{114}
\end{quote}

There is no doubt that the large Roma settlement in the industrial area of Votanikos district in Athens has been an emblematic case of the inability for action from the part of the state and the solution promoted. This location hosted a fluctuating population of around 800 – 1000 individuals according to GO estimates\footnote{115} or 550-2,000 Roma from Albania according to various press items.\footnote{116}

On 17 August 2012 the settlement was dismantled by the municipality of Athens, after being partly destroyed by a fire. Additional pressure was placed upon the remaining Roma living in there in order to totally abandon this area by holding 85 residents in custody in order to check the legality of their residence status.\footnote{117} Press reports have been noticing that these were Albanian citizens and since Albania is not \footnote{113}‘The aim of these actions was to ensure adequate living conditions for this vulnerable population, and to prevent the possibility of compulsory eviction from this plot of land without the guarantees stemming from the Constitution and the legislation in force. Special care was taken so that no sanctions would be imposed for violation of the sanitary regulations as was suggested by the Prefecture of Athens and Piraeus, Directory for the Protection of the Environment. The reason for such a move was twofold: these sanctions would have been unsuitable and ineffective, and by neglecting to take into consideration the particularities of this population and the special conditions under which they live, they would have constituted negligence to handle dissimilar cases individually, contradicting the principle of equal treatment.’ The response of the Municipality of Athens was still pending when the Ombudsman’s annual report was published.

The Greek Ombudsman (2006) 2nd Annual Report as National Equality Body, available at: \url{http://www.synigoros.gr/diakriseis/pdfs/12_10_EqualTreatmentReport2006.pdf}. In 2008 the General Directorate of the District of Attica sent a letter to the Municipality of Athens asking from the latter to study the whole issue of Roma of Votanikos area and submit proposals concerning possible “suitable places” for their transfer. Nevertheless, the problem has not been solved so far and the Ombudsman concluded that the competent authorities were unwilling to provide a proper solution.

In two cases, 119 the Greek Ombudsman (GO) had the opportunity to examine the reactions of neighbours to Roma settlements in Lefkada. In the first case, Roma settled permanently in their ‘houses’ on a plot of land owned by a Roma relative and lacking in basic facilities such as toilets, drainage, and electricity supply. 120

The GO addressed the Municipality and the competent departments of the Prefecture of Lefkada, stressing the compelling need for improvement of the living conditions of Roma in accordance with the legislation in force ‘for the settlement of wandering people’. 121

In the second case, residents of the hamlet of Apolpaina in Lefkada filed a complaint (in reaction to the first case to the GO on): 122

the settlement of Roma in makeshift shacks and other structures (tents, toilets built with cement blocks) within the restricted-build area of the Holy Temple of Panaghia Hodegetria, a listed historical monument itself, and for the poor sanitary conditions on this plot. 123

The GO undertook the role of the mediator with a double aim: to preserve the area of the historical monument, and to ensure that the local authorities offer to the Roma special support as a group facing social exclusion.

120 ‘This caused inappropriate health conditions and infections, affecting the settlers as well as their neighbours. In addition, due to the lack of electricity supply, the Roma were obliged to use a generator for long hours causing noise that disturbed their neighbours. The Health Division of the Prefecture of Lefkada visited and examined the settlement and made recommendations to the Roma living in the area without, however, having made any progress ever since.’ The Greek Ombudsman (2006) 2nd Annual Report as National Equality Body, p. 12. 123 ‘The competent Ephorate of Byzantine Antiquities of the Ministry of Culture, following an on the spot investigation, recommended to the Mayor of Lefkada to remove the Roma from the site and to relocate them on a plot that is not in the vicinity of sites or buildings of archaeological interest. The Mayor of Lefkada refused to evacuate the site, referring to the permanent nature of the settlement as well as the fact that the plot is owned by Roma.’ The Greek Ombudsman (2006) 2nd Annual Report as National Equality Body, available at: http://www.synigoros.gr/diakriseis/pdfs/12_10_EqualTreatmentReport2006.pdf.
To this effect the GO claimed specifically the positive action option that the new Municipal and Communal Code provides for.\textsuperscript{124}

Another complaint concerning Roma before the Greek Ombudsman was filed by a female citizen about the long delay by the competent department of the municipality of Zephyri in issuing a payment receipt for real estate tax paid in order to use it in drafting a real estate sales contract where the buyer concerned was Roma. A similar complaint was also filed at the GO about a delay in issuing a real estate tax receipt by the municipality of Ano Liossia, which also included the accusation that this constituted common dilatory tactics on the part of the municipality, in order to discourage owners from selling their properties to Roma.\textsuperscript{125}

Finally, the payment receipts were issued following intervention by the GO; however, due to the regular occurrence of similar complaints, the GO is examining the possibility of intervening on this issue in a comprehensive way.\textsuperscript{126}

As it was published in March 2008,\textsuperscript{127} the GO has launched a series of initiatives aimed at motivating and coordinating the competent authorities so as to ensure appropriate living conditions for this vulnerable population group and at the same time to prevent their forced removal from this occupied land without the guarantees provided for by the Constitution and relevant legislation. In particular, the GO asked the General Directorate for Development Programmes of the Ministry of Interior to undertake the role of coordinator within the framework of the “Integrated Action Plan for the social inclusion of Greek Roma”, so that the competent authorities can take specific measures to improve the living conditions of this vulnerable population group. A worrying incident was the unexpected removal of Roma families from a land property in the area of Votanikos (on Aghiou Polykarpou street), which seems to have been carried out at the expense of a third party businessman.

Following this event, the GO stressed the compelling need to find a long term solution for the housing issue of Roma people of this area remarking that a possible “purchase” of their relocation tolerated by the municipal authorities or by means of initiatives of other parties acting on the Municipality’s behalf constitutes violation of the Municipality’s duty to take all necessary measures for the relocation of this population group since in such a way the existing problem would merely be postponed.

The GO suggested that the committee provided for in the Joint Ministerial Decision GP/2 3641/2003, article 2 be immediately established on the initiative of the General Secretary of the Region of Attica so as to track down the appropriate location and the relocation process for the wandering Roma group. Following the establishment of this committee, the GO asked for expediency and requested from the Municipality of Athens an immediate report on this issue. Furthermore the GO requested the intervention of the Minister of Interior so that a viable solution is found regarding the delimitation of the relocation area of the Roma population groups living in Attica (case 13986/2006). Nevertheless, public authorities and the Municipality of Athens in particular are still displaying unjustified inertness or indolence.

As far as specific cases are concerned, the GO received a complaint from inhabitants of Alexandroupoli regarding the delay in the inclusion of the settlement camp on Avantos street in the city’s urban plan. This delay caused various other problems related to the settlement’s infrastructure and the operation of regular and nursery schools as well as the health and social services centre of the settlement. The GO contacted the local authorities and gathered information on the time schedule for the settlement’s inclusion in the city’s urban plan and the implementation of the respective urban planning study. Moreover, it received an update on the overall approach to the issue of educating the children living in the settlement as well as on ways of optimizing the operation of the social and health services centre. The GO is closely monitoring the progress of integrating the settlement in the social network (case 6174/2007).

Moreover, the Drossero Women’s Association in Xanthi had filed a complaint with the GO commenting on the lack of infrastructure (e.g. water supply, sewage, drainage, asphalt paving), the ownership status of the Roma settlement as well as on the operation of regular and nursery schools and the social and health services centre in the area. The GO contacted the competent services of the Municipality of Xanthi and during an on site investigation found out that the difficulty in solving the aforementioned problems is linked to the fact that Drossero is not a recognized settlement but consists of illegal constructions. Nonetheless, the Municipality of Xanthi has allegedly carried out a series of works and has submitted a proposal for the inclusion of this area in the General Urban Plan and the recognition of the settlement. The GO has suggested alternative ways in order to expedite the process of including the area in the General Urban Plan, to promote the construction of schools as well as to ensure the proper operation of nursery schools and the health centre as a link between the settlement and the wider social context. The GO is keeping track of the developments in this case (case 4639/2007).

Finally, it is worthwhile to mention that since the beginning of its operation the GO has intervened in many ways in order to seek solutions for the improvement of the living conditions for the Roma population in the area of Aspropyros (including the areas of Nea Zoi, Psari, Neoktista Aspropyrgou, etc.) given the amplitude of complaints among which many have been received from a) property owners whose properties have been trespassed or exposed to the negative consequences of their neighbouring with the Sinti settlements, b) Sinti complaining about their living conditions, c) Associations of Sinti or non Sinti citizens who aim at improving the living conditions of all inhabitants and the protection of the environment, d) the Municipality of Aspropyrgos, e) Non-Governmental Organizations and f) human rights international organizations.

During the course of its investigations the GO has carried out onsite inspections in the area and has issued a relevant fact-finding report calling for the public prosecutor’s intervention.

In addition, the GO has attended a meeting of the municipal council of Aspropyrgos and has supported all positive efforts aiming at improving the living conditions of the settlement inhabitants, establishing peace among the various social groups and providing education to Roma children without, however, having any remarkable results.

The GO, understanding the importance and complexity of the housing rehabilitation and social inclusion of Roma population in the area has suggested to the competent services that the most appropriate solution is to launch a long term comprehensive project with a detailed intervention plan which, as the GO remarks, has been impermissibly delayed. In early 2008 the GO shall inform the authorities involved on the content of these specific actions. This project should be implemented along with provisional measures for improving their living conditions such as garbage collection, water and electricity supply in combination with transitional inclusion programmes such as vocational training, relocation incentives (cases 15891/2007, 16048/2006, 14062/2006, 1919/2006, 13301/2001, 14902/2001, 13399/2001, 11128/2000).

Since the lack of enrolment of a vast number of Roma in municipality registry has a negative impact on the exercise of their housing rights (e.g. the possibility to obtain a housing loan), in August 2009 the GO published a Report concerning the enrolment of Roma in Municipality records. The GO recommended three versions of a proposal for a programme of secure, fast and effective enrolment of all Roma : a) acquisition of a municipality status through a previous definition of their existing citizenship or through a birth certificate for those who are stateless (a solution that would not require a previous introduction of a Law), b) acquisition of a municipality status through a special invitation for a massive registration of all Roma in municipality records based on birth certificate or on a court decision if such a certificate does not exist (a solution that would require a previous introduction of a Law) , c) acquisition of a municipality status massive registration of Roma in municipality records, without any condition at all (e.g. previous definition of citizenship, birth certificate, court decision), which would require a legislative reform as well.

In response to two written questions from Members of the European Parliament about the situation of Roma in Greece, the Commissioner, Mr Špidla, said that the Commission had already started a preliminary examination under the provisions of Directive 2000/43 (answer, 6.9.2005).

The Council of Europe European Committee of Social Rights has examined one collective complaint concerning the situation of Roma in Greece; this complaint (No. 15/2003) was brought by the European Roma Rights Centre.

The Committee decided that in Greece ‘Roma have insufficient supply of appropriate camping sites’ and that the criteria for eviction of Roma by the Greek authorities ‘must not be unduly wide’.

One more relevant complaint is still pending before the Committee (it declared the complaint admissible on 23 September 2008). It was brought by the International Centre for the Legal Protection of Human Rights — INTERIGHTS (No. 49/2008). On 25 May 2010, the European Committee of Social Rights, for the second time in five years, has condemned Greece for continued serious and widespread discrimination against Roma in respect of housing rights (Collective Complaint No. 49/2008).

Greek law, including the anti-discrimination law, does not provide for the availability of housing which is accessible to older people and people with disabilities.

In a View publicized on 16 October 2010 (and issued on 14 September 2010), the U.N. Human Rights Committee considered a Roma family’s allegations, also corroborated by photographic evidence, claiming that arbitrary and unlawful eviction and demolition of their home with significant impact on the Roma family life and infringement on their rights to enjoy their way of life as a minority, had been sufficiently established. For these reasons, the Committee concluded that the demolition of the Roma family’s shed and the prevention of construction of a new home in the Roma Riganokampos settlement amounted to a violation of articles 17, 23 and 27 read alone and in conjunction with article 2, paragraph 3, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. However, in the light of the Committee’s findings, it did not deem it necessary to examine the Roma family’s allegation of a violation under articles 7 and 26 alone (on interdiction of discrimination) and read in conjunction with Article 2 (on effective access to judicial means without discrimination), paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the Covenant.

In particular, during July and August 2006, Antonios Georgopoulos, Chrysafo Georgopoulou and their seven children, born and raised in the Roma settlement of Riganokampos in the city of Patras, left Patras for the city of Agrinio for seasonal employment and to visit relatives. On 25 August 2006, a crew of the Municipality of Patras visited the Roma settlement of Riganokampos and demolished all the sheds of the inhabitants who were not present at that time. Upon return, the Roma family visited the Welfare Department of the municipality of Patras to complain. There, they were told that they should start looking for an apartment to rent and that the Municipality would undertake to provide them with rental subsidies. They were then given a sum of approximately 200 euros for the destruction of their home and some of their belongings. The Georgopoulos family claim that their forced relocation and demolition of their shed were acts which had not been authorised by any judicial or other decision and thus could not be subject of judicial review. Their forced relocation and demolition of their shed were termed as “cleaning operations.”

While looking for an apartment, they lived in the shed of a relative in Riganokampos, one of the three that had not been demolished. Due to overcrowding, the Roma family decided to erect a new shed in the settlement.

On 26 September 2006, a police patrol car and a bulldozer were dispatched, and they were told to stop erecting their shed otherwise they would be arrested. Faced with the threat of arrest, they decided not to oppose the demolition of their shed. On 22 June 2007 the Roma family brought the case in front of the U.N. Human Rights Committee which is competent for the enforcement of the I.C.C.P.R. According to the Roma family, the authorities are not willing to let them, and other Roma residents of the Riganokampos settlement, implement improvement measures at their own initiative. They also claimed that numerous prosecutors had not only failed to launch criminal investigations in relation to the failure of local authorities to deal with Roma’s housing problem for the last 10 years, but they also employed blatantly racist arguments in reaching their decisions, which remained unsanctioned. Finally, among others, they argued that the destruction of their houses twice and their unfulfilled expectation with regard to their non-eviction pending relocation, amounts to cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment in violation of article 7 of the I.C.C.P.R.

The Greek State argued in the past that since a relevant domestic criminal investigation had been completed with Patras Appeals Prosecutor Decrees 44/2009 and 56/2009 rejecting the allegations on the Georgopoulos family (and other Roma’

s) unlawful eviction, it had complied with the requirement for the provision of an effective remedy. The State argued that this was an obligation of means and not of a result. It is noteworthy that the Georgopoulos case is procedurally identical to the Zeliof and Petropoulou-Tsakiris cases, submitted by the NGO “Greek Helsinki Monitor” (GHM) as well. In the Petropoulou-Tsakiris case, a re-examination was ordered but the Supreme Court Prosecutor who considered the ECHR judgment as “new information that justify the re-examination of the case” in application of Articles 43.3 and 47 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Likewise, the merits of the Georgopoulos case were never examined by a court, but the case was archived as unfounded by two prosecutors. Hence, according to the ECHR, the State should have asked the Supreme Court Prosecutor to order the re-examination in this case as well, but failed to take such action.

On 26 April 2011, GHM filed with the Supreme Court Prosecutor a request for a re-examination, referring to the Petropoulou-Tsakiris case. On 29 April 2011, the Supreme Court Prosecutor ordered the Patras Appeals Prosecutor to carry out a re-examination. On 6 June 2011, with Decree 64/2011, the Patras Appeals Prosecutor decided that a re-examination should be carried out and ordered the Patras First Instance Prosecutor to carry out an urgent supplementary preliminary examination, because of imminent prescription of the alleged crimes, by summoning for explanatory statements the accused, including the then Mayor of Patras. On 17 June 2011, with Decree 71/2011, the Patras Appeals Prosecutor decided to partly overturn his previous Decrees 44/2009 and 56/2009, to accept GHM’s applications for review 6/2009 and 22/2009 as partly well-founded, and to order the Patras First Instance Prosecutor to indict the then Mayor and two Deputy Mayors of Patras, as well as their unknown accomplices (the crews who carried out the evictions) for continuous breach of duty between 27 July and 15 September 2006, for the demolition of the homes of eight Roma families, seven Greek- including Georgopoulos – and one Albanian).

Discrimination of Roma in the field of housing seems to be a crucial problem in Greece. For instance, the ECSR has condemned Greece for continued serious and widespread discrimination against Roma in respect of housing rights. In an unprecedented re-examination under the collective complaints system, the ECSR unanimously upheld all of the main substantive allegations in a collective complaint filed in March 2008 by Interights in partnership with GHM. It also highlighted the systematic discrimination experienced by the Roma and the failure of the government to provide adequate safeguards and remedies for this vulnerable community. The previous ECSR decision against Greece\textsuperscript{140} found that not only had Greece made insufficient progress in implementing recommendations from the previous decision but it had also committed significant new breaches of its housing obligations.

According to the Greek Ombudsman there has been an increase of complaints for Roma cases falling under Law 3304/2005. This is due – to a large extent – to the Ombudsman’s networking with organisations and agencies involved in protecting the rights of this racial group, and due to the fact that Roma’s integration in housing programmes, where the Administration acts to provide, allows for intervention in accordance with the provisions and the scope of Law 3304/2005 (article 4 par. 1 (h)).\textsuperscript{141} In its Annual Report 2010 published in 2011, the Greek Ombudsman refers to the complaints that it received in 2010 from Roma and local unions that represent them requesting its intervention in order to halt the forced seizure of their property – obtained via the Housing Programme – due to failure to fulfil their contractual obligations (repay the loans) and to amend the terms of the loan agreements, to facilitate the fulfilment of their obligations. It is worth comparing the debts for which forced seizure of property was imposed ranged from 1,500 to 3,500 euros to the loan provided 60,000 euros or the total value of the building (commercial and objective), which often exceeds considerably this amount. The Greek Ombudsman addressed recommendations to the competent Ministries for addressing the problem bearing in mind the public interest and the materialisation of the aims of the Housing Programme. So far no change has been noted.\textsuperscript{142}

According to the Ombudsman’s Report 2010 (which was published in 2011), in the year 2010 there was no significant improvement at central or regional planning regarding the improvement of Roma’s living conditions or other problems encountered by this vulnerable group. Partly encouraging was Authority’s intervention for the prevention of Roma expulsions from places in which arbitrarily have been established (cases of Atalanti, Xaraugi and Nea Alikarnassos). However, overall, despite the clear, repeated and persistent administration, to take immediate action to address the problems, no initiative for central coordination towards that direction or even sub-regional plans emerged this year.

Another serious incident, regards Etoliko town where 50 Roma families lived according to GO’s on spot investigations, instigated by non Roma citizen complaints. Following serious clashes between Roma and non Roma in August 2012 several Roma illegal buildings were torn down by the municipal authorities. 4 arrests of Roma were reportedly made (2 Greek and 2 Albanian Roma according to Kathimerini daily newspaper).\textsuperscript{143}

In September 2012, in the village of Anthili (Fthiotida prefecture), escalation of tension between Roma and no-Roma communities took place. 40 families of Roma have recently settled there in their private houses, which were obtained through the state run housing loans programme (see par.2c above). Locals strongly opposed coexistence with the Roma on the grounds of their perceived delinquency and were demanding the evacuation of the Roma houses.\footnote{The issue was reported into the GO (2012) annual report, pp.113-116 and has caught public attention. See indicatively: “Imera Kentrikis Ellados” daily, 3.4. 2013.}

In several areas around Greece, Roma continue to be evicted without any provision of alternative housing or they are resettled in isolated areas usually without infrastructure. In all cases they are not consulted.

A characteristic case concern the Roma of Halandri (a suburb of Athens) who had been living in that Greater Athens area since the late 1970s without prior relocation and despite interim measures taken by the UN HRC in May 2013 and confirmed in August 2013! In 1995-1996 the urban planning authorities had issued decisions that the -at the time- 43 lodgings housing Roma families in that area were illegal and had to be demolished. An attempt to execute those decisions was carried out in 1999 but it was averted after an intervention of the Halandri municipal authorities and the Office of the Prime Minister. The demolition was averted as it was declared that the state had to first find a suitable alternative area to relocate those families. Efforts to find relocation failed. The Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica, on 4 September 2012, issued a decision to demolish on 18 September 2012 the 43 lodgings registered as illegal in 1995-1996 and belonging to 37 owners and one to an unknown owner, without even updating that list, Yet he knew that eleven owners are dead today, while nine have moved out. So, only 17 owners of 19 lodgings from the initial list were served with the decision to demolish their homes, in a settlement that has today more than 50 homes, the majority belonging to owners not concened by the 1995-1996 demolition orders. The demolition was avoided after an injunction by a President of the Athens Administrative Court of Appeals issued on 17 September 2012 following a motion for annulment. On 12 November 2012 the Athens Administrative Court of Appeals issued its Judgment 1040/2012 rejecting the motion as inadmissible, without considering it on the merits, since the “\textit{decision with which the demolition of the constructions irrevocably considered as illegal was ordered does not have an executable character.” } The Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica, on 26 February 2013, issued a new decision to demolish the 43 lodgings on 14 May 2013 even though he also issued a decision on 16 April 2013 to relocate the entire Roma community in an adjacent plot of land. So the state planned to demolish the homes and then in some unknown future date provide alternative housing. So, on 6 May 2013, the Roma community through GHM filed a communication to UN HRC seeking also as a matter of urgency an immediate injunction to their forced eviction through demolition of their lodgings while the case is under consideration by the Committee. The latter granted the interim measures on 10
May 2013, which were maintained on 14 August 2013, when the HRC transmitted to Greece the authors’ comments. In the meantime, because of fierce anti-Romani reaction by neighbours the relocation in an adjacent era was cancelled. In total secrecy, including without consulting with the Roma and/or the Ombudsman who was involved in the case, the Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica decided to relocate the Roma atop a far away mountain in Megara, outside Greater Athens, in an old NATO American radar base! The two decisions, of cancellation of the previous relocation decision and of relocation in the new area, were issued on 18 October 2013 but were not notified to the Roma and the Municipality of Megara until 25 November 2013. In the meantime, on 8 November 2013, the Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica issued a new decision to demolish the Roma homes on 25 February 2014 in blatant violation of the interim measures taken and reaffirmed by the UN HRC. In specific, on 8 November 2013 the Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attika decided to relocate the Roma families from Halandri to an old NATO American Radar base on top of Patera Mountain, near the town of Megara. According to GHM and the Halandri Roma this decision was taken without any consultation with the community and/or the Greek Ombudsperson. The Roma object to the relocation as it is in a remote area and it would be difficult for them to access schools and health services. In addition they are registered residents of the municipality of Halandri and entitled under Greek legislation to be housed in Halandri. Moreover, the municipalities of Megara and (adjacent) Mandra took decisions opposing that relocation, which though the Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica stated in the newspaper “Efimerida ton Syntakton” that he does have to take into consideration: he is determined to move the Roma to that place despite the objection of the Roma and the local authorities, which in the meantime have blocked any works in that area atop Patera Mountain.

A few months earlier, in August 2013, one hour away from Athens, and with no possible resistance, Roma from Atalanti were coerced by police to resettle in a far away area without proper infrastructure and without even proper authorization by the regional authorities. One year earlier, another hour away, in Lamia, Roma were forced to resettle in another far away area in Kamilovrisi, again without proper infrastructure and without even proper authorization by the regional authorities. In September 2013, in Aharnai/Menidi (Attica) eleven Roma homes were demolished without first securing relocation. On 30 July 2013, in Kalamata (Peloponnese) fourteen Roma homes were demolished without first securing relocation. Previous evictions without relocation in 2012-2013 took place also in Votanikos (Athens), Koropi (near the Athens Airport), Rhodes (twice), and Iraklion Crete. Based on municipal announcements, GHM reported that on 4 June 2013, on the island of Rhodes, 10 municipal police officers detained 15 Romani adults and 20 children who had recently arrived on the island and camped in public places. Police allegedly confiscated and destroyed their personal belongings and detained them for a day before forcing them to leave the island by boat. For most of the above cases, as well as for existing destitute Roma communities, parliamentary questions had been tabled by opposition MPs, with the government failing to provide any or adequate information. Two more related actions need be added here. As mentioned above, the Psari, Aspropyrgos Roma community, squatting on private property, visited by ECRI in 2008 was unlawfully and forcefully evicted in August 2010. Moreover, the Secretary General of the Decentralized Administration of Attica issued on 30 October an order to demolish 192 Roma homes in Megara on 14 November 2013, without previously having secured alternative housing: the demolition was cancelled unofficially. Previously, the Municipality of Megara had demolished the homes of 14 Roma families on 17 April 2013, again without the provision of relocation.

On September 2013 the Second Periodical Report of Greek Republic regarding the International Convenant of Civil and Political Rights made extensive references to the National Action Plan for Social Integration of Greek Roma. In December 2013, the National Commission of Human Rights, in its remarks regarding the implementation of the above Convenant noted that, by default the Programme lacked robust legal safeguards for eliminating undermining factors, since, as also the Greek Ombudsman aptly has observed, there is no integrated institutional and regulatory framework in Greece which could effectively ensure Roma’s participation in social life. This deficit is felt by Roma themselves, as well by those members of the country’s political and administrative leadership who are interested in Roma’s social empowerment.

According to the NCHR, it is a fact that among all the announced housing measures, the loan programme was the one that went further and was even described as a good practice by the Council of Europe’s Committee of Experts on Roma issues. This programme, however, applies only in one type of residence, was deemed costly and subject to poor management - since there is no control provided by the institutional framework over the disposal of the loan - and there was a strong difference of opinion regarding the suitability and / or compliance with the defined social and economic priority criteria. Specifically, the report of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) published in 2009 stated that “the housing loan project did not always benefit the target groups”.

4 EXCEPTIONS

4.1 Genuine and determining occupational requirements (Article 4)

Does national law provide an exception for genuine and determining occupational requirements? If so, does this comply with Article 4 of Directive 2000/43 and Article 4(1) of Directive 2000/78?

Law 3304/2005 allows exemptions to the application of the principle of equal treatment in various contexts as far as professional requirements are concerned. More specifically, Articles 5, 9 and 11 of this law provide that a difference of treatment based on a characteristic related to racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, age or sexual orientation (disability is not covered) shall not constitute discrimination where, by reason of the nature of the particular occupational activities concerned or of the context in which they are carried out, such a characteristic constitutes a genuine and determining occupational requirement, provided that the objective is legitimate and the requirement proportionate. Specifically on religious or other beliefs Article 9(2) stipulates that these beliefs should also be ‘a genuine, legitimate and justified occupational requirement’.

4.2 Employers with an ethos based on religion or belief (Art. 4(2) Directive 2000/78)

a) Does national law provide an exception for employers with an ethos based on religion or belief? If so, does this comply with Article 4(2) of Directive 2000/78?

As far as occupational requirements are concerned, in Articles 9 and 11 of the Greek non-discrimination legislation in Law 3304/2005, there are special provisions for professions related to churches, religious institutions and public or private organisations. According to these provisions, the law does not affect the right of public or private organisations, the ethos of which is based on religious or other beliefs, to demand that persons working for them act in compliance with this ethos. In these cases, religion or belief compatible with such an ethos constitutes a genuine, legitimate and justified occupational requirement.

In Article 9(2), Law 3304/2005 specifies that it does not affect provisions or policies already in existence which relate to the occupational activities of churches or other organisations or associations, the deontology of which is based on religious or other beliefs. This difference of treatment is based on general principles of EC Law and cannot justify discrimination based on other reasons.

b) Are there any specific provisions or case law in this area relating to conflicts between the rights of organisations with an ethos based on religion or belief and other rights to non-discrimination? (e.g. organisations with an ethos based on religion v. sexual orientation or other ground).
There are no specific provisions or case-law in this area relating to conflicts between the rights of organisations with an ethos based on religion or belief and other rights to non-discrimination (e.g. sexual orientation).

c) Are religious institutions permitted to select people (on the basis of their religion) to hire or to dismiss from a job when that job is in a state entity, or in an entity financed by the State (e.g. the Catholic church in Italy or Spain can select religious teachers in state schools)? What are the conditions for such selection? Is this possibility provided for by national law only, or international agreements with the Holy See, or a combination of both? Is there any case law on this?

According to well-established jurisprudence of the Greek Council of State, as a state entity of public law (Article 1(4) of Law 590/1977), the Orthodox Church of Greece is obliged to respect the fundamental constitutional provisions which provide, among others, for non-discrimination (on religious grounds) of Greek citizens in their access to employment in a Church entity. In other words, religious beliefs do not constitute criteria for public sector recruitment, even if this recruitment concerns Orthodox institutions.

Moreover, according to the Greek Council of State, the State or the Orthodox Church have no right to enquire into the religion of teachers of courses on religion in schools, because such courses concern persons with any form of belief, including atheists.

The negative reaction of the previous Greek Orthodox Archbishop Christodoulos to the appointment of atheist teachers of courses on religion in schools did not change the situation. There was no judicial act, on behalf of the Church, to react against those appointments.

However, apart from the Turkish language being used in parallel with Greek in schools for Muslim minority children in Thrace, no other native language of migrant or minority children is used in public education in Greece. Apart from Muslim minority teachers, who systematically teach in Turkish in the minority schools in Thrace, no other cases of migrant or minority teachers teaching foreign languages and/or culture, or even working as assistants in Greek public schools were found.

There is no case law on this issue.

150 The Council of State judged that local origin and religious beliefs do not constitute criteria for public sector recruitment, countering the draft Presidential Decree that concerns recruiting persons for the Panhellenic Sacred Foundation of Evaggelistria of Tinos. See Eleftherotipia (17.08.2007), available at: http://www.enet.gr/online/online_text/c=112,dt=17.08.2007/id=26095400.

4.3 Armed forces and other specific occupations (Art. 3(4) and Recital 18 Directive 2000/78)

a) Does national law provide for an exception for the armed forces in relation to age or disability discrimination (Article 3(4), Directive 2000/78)?

National law provides an exception for the armed forces in relation to age or disability discrimination. Article 8(4) of Law 3304/2005 provides that:

“The provisions of this chapter [note: Equal treatment in employment and occupation], in so far as it relates to different treatment on the grounds of age or disability, relevant to service, shall not apply to the armed forces and the security bodies” (consequently also the police, prison or emergency services, e.g. fire department).

On 11 April 2012 Greece ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol by Law 4074/2012. According to Article 2 of this Law, the provisions of article 27 par. 1 of the Convention do not apply to the armed forces and law enforcement agencies with regard to differential treatment due to disability as provided for in Article 8 para. 4 of Law 3304/2005 on the implementation of equal treatment pursuant to Articles 3 para. 4 and 4 of Directive 2000/78/EC.

b) Are there any provisions or exceptions relating to employment in the police, prison or emergency services (Recital 18, Directive 2000/78)?

4.4 Nationality discrimination (Art. 3(2))

Both the Racial Equality Directive and the Employment Equality Directive include exceptions relating to difference of treatment based on nationality (Article 3(2) in both Directives).

a) How does national law treat nationality discrimination? Does this include stateless status?

What is the relationship between ‘nationality’ and ‘race or ethnic origin’, in particular in the context of indirect discrimination?

Is there overlap in case law between discrimination on grounds of nationality and ethnicity (i.e. where nationality discrimination may constitute ethnic discrimination as well?)

153 OG A’ 88/11.4.2012.
Adopting the wording of Article 3(2) of the two Directives, Article 4(2) of Law 3304/2005 incorporates all the exceptions allowed by the Directives, including nationality and stateless status. Interpreting this provision, the Council of State confirmed that Article 4(2) of Law 3304/2005 stipulates that it does not cover differences of treatment based on nationality.\textsuperscript{154}

According to the Greek legal system, there is little difference between ‘nationality’ and ‘race or ethnic origin’. Over the last decades, only persons of Greek origin could obtain Greek nationality. Recently, the legislature has provided that Greek nationality can be obtained by persons of non-Greek origin.

The Greek Ombudsman proceeds thus: when discrimination is based on two grounds, on both nationality and racial or ethnic origin, it always prefers to investigate such complaints on the ground of nationality. This happens because the Ombudsman appears to wish to avoid references to the ethnic origin of persons claiming to be victims of discrimination.

\textit{b) Are there exceptions in anti-discrimination law that seek to rely on Article 3(2)?}

Article 4(2) of Law 3304/2005 does not provide any exception.

\textbf{4.5 Work-related family benefits (Recital 22 Directive 2000/78)}

Some employers, both public and private, provide benefits to employees in respect of their partners. For example, an employer might provide employees with free or subsidised private health insurance, covering both the employees and their partners. Certain employers limit these benefits to the married partners (e.g. Case C-267/06 Maruko) or unmarried opposite-sex partners of employees. This question aims to establish how national law treats such practices. Please note: this question is focused on benefits provided by the employer. We are not looking for information on state social security arrangements.

\textit{a) Would it constitute unlawful discrimination in national law if an employer only provides benefits to those employees who are married?}

Article 8(3) of Law 3304/2005 reads as follows:

\begin{quote}
The principle of equal treatment, irrespective of religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation, is not applied to any benefits which are offered by the public systems or their equivalents, including the public systems of social security and assistance.
\end{quote}

The above provision of Law 3304/2005 seems to permit an employer (in the public or private sectors) to provide (social) benefits, including health benefits, that are limited to those who are married.

b) Would it constitute unlawful discrimination in national law if an employer only provides benefits to those employees with opposite-sex partners?

In addition, the above provision of Law 3304/2005 seems to permit an employer (in the public or private sectors) to provide (social) benefits, including health benefits, that are limited only to those with opposite-sex partners.

However, on 7th November 2013 the European Court of Human Rights ruled that exclusion of same-sex couples from “civil unions” in the Greek legal order breaches the European Convention of Human Rights (see chapter 0.3 above).

4.6 Health and safety (Art. 7(2) Directive 2000/78)

a) Are there exceptions in relation to disability and health and safety (Article 7(2), Directive 2000/78)?

Law 3304/2005 provides that:

b) Are there exceptions relating to health and safety law in relation to other grounds, for example, ethnic origin or religion where there may be issues of dress or personal appearance (turbans, hair, beards, jewellery, etc.)?

The ‘Health and Safety Defence' clause also is expressed as follows:

With regard to disabled persons, the principle of equal treatment shall be without prejudice to the establishment or to maintaining measures on the protection of health and safety at work.

There are no other exceptions relating to health and safety law in relation to rules on ethnic origin or religion, where there may be issues of dress or personal appearance.
4.7 Exceptions related to discrimination on the ground of age (Art. 6 Directive 2000/78)

4.7.1 Direct discrimination

Please, indicate whether national law provides an exception for age? (Does the law allow for direct discrimination on the ground of age?)

Is it possible, generally, or in specified circumstances, to justify direct discrimination on the ground of age? If so, is the test compliant with the test in Article 6, Directive 2000/78, account being taken of the Court of Justice of the European Union in the Case C-144/04, Mangold and Case C-555/07 Kucukdeveci?

Law 3304/2005 allows –in a direct form- the following exemption (defences) as far as the criterion of age is concerned, adopting almost literally the text of Article 6 of the Framework Directive:

… Such differences of treatment may include, among others:

1. the setting of special conditions on access to employment and vocational training, employment and occupation, including dismissal and remuneration conditions, for young people, older workers and persons with caring responsibilities in order to promote their vocational integration or ensure their protection;
2. the fixing of minimum conditions of age, professional experience or seniority in service for access to employment or to certain advantages linked to employment;
3. the fixing of a maximum age for recruitment which is based on the training requirements of the post in question or the need for a reasonable period of employment before retirement.

2. Notwithstanding Article 7, the fixing for occupational social security schemes of ages for admission or entitlement to retirement or invalidity benefits, including the fixing under those schemes of different ages for employees or groups or categories of employees, and the use, in the context of such schemes, of age criteria in actuarial calculations, does not constitute discrimination on the grounds of age, provided this does not result in discrimination on the grounds of sex..

There is currently no debate developing in Greece about the implementation of the requirements of the Directive with regard to direct discrimination and therefore there is no way to verify if the test is compliant with the test in Article 6, Directive 2000/78, account being taken of the Court of Justice of the European Union in the Case C-144/04, Mangold and Case C-555/07 Kucukdeveci.

a) Does national law permit differences of treatment based on age for any activities within the material scope of Directive 2000/78?
No, it does not, except as detailed in the remainder of this section.

b) Does national legislation allow occupational pension schemes to fix ages for admission to the scheme or entitlement to benefits, taking up the possibility provided for by article 6(2)?

National legislation allows occupational pension schemes to fix ages for admission to the scheme and entitlement to benefits.

4.7.2 Special conditions for young people, older workers and persons with caring responsibilities

Are there any special conditions set by law for older or younger workers in order to promote their vocational integration, or for persons with caring responsibilities to ensure their protection? If so, please describe these.

In May 2012, according to an advisory opinion of the Legal State Council (268/11.5.2012), which is a body that is competent to provide the Government with legal advice, public servants or employees in the public sector on a private law contract of indefinite duration, whose spouse is 100% disabled and supported by him/her, may have their working hours reduced by 1 hour on a daily basis without any wage reduction, even where their working hours are already reduced due to the nature of their employment, such as because their work belongs to a special category (harder conditions etc). Article 10 of Law 3304/2005 transposes article 5 of Directive 2000/78/EC verbatim.

4.7.3 Minimum and maximum age requirements

Are there exceptions permitting minimum and/or maximum age requirements in relation to access to employment (notably in the public sector) and training?

Yes, there are. However, under the provision of Laws 3051/2002, 3144/2003 and 3174/2003, maximum age limits for both ‘ordinary’ personnel and compulsorily placed persons (disabled persons, subject to provisions of Law 2643/1998) in relation to access or appointment to the public sector, public entities, local administration organisations (at levels a and b), and legal entities established under private law operating in the public sector are abolished.

Despite the fact that the insurance and social security issues of bank employees are currently being raised and have caused considerable social impact (strikes), there has not been any formal discussion of whether the minimum and maximum age requirements which are applied in this context are compliant with Directive 2000/78 and Law 3304/2005.

Age is set as condition for participating in the competition for court clerks, in firefighters, armed and security corps and for the appointment of mediators and referees. Young and older people usually are forced to face restrictions and disincentives upon accepting a job position or maintaining it.

In general, the jurisprudence of Greek courts has proven that, in the employment sector, discrimination based on age (through the introduction of age limits) violates the right to professional freedom enshrined in article 5, par. 1 of the Greek Constitution.

In its judgment 851/2011 (17.03.2011) the Supreme Administrative Court held that the age limit of maximum 35 years for the participation in the exams for probationer magistrates of 4th grade, is not contrary to the provisions of Directive 2000/78/EC and the Constitution, because according to the Court the maximum age ensures that judges can have a career in which there is enough time to specialise in a particular branch. Furthermore, it held that it was correct for the time spent on military service not to be taken into account for the calculation of the age limit, because otherwise that would violate the principle of gender equality.

According to Article 1 para. 1 of Act No. 6 of the Cabinet “Implementation of par. 6 article 1 of Law 4046/2012”, the minimum wage provided for by the National General Collective Employment Agreement was reduced by 22% from 14 February 2012 until the completion of the fiscal adjustment programme. For employees under the age of 25 this reduction is 32%.

In March 2012, the Legal State Council, which is a body that is competent to provide the Government with non binding legal advice, issued (in its 6th Session) an Advisory Opinion concerning the compatibility of some provisions of the organisational law of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs with Directive 2000/78/EC. According to these provisions, unless the employees of the Ministry have completed 35 years of service they may continue to work until the age of 67. These provisions do not apply to employees serving in the Diplomatic Corps. The State Council held that by reason of the nature of Directive 2000/78/EC as a general framework of principles on non-discriminatory treatment, and by reason therefore of the need for an assessment as to whether the said provision constitutes a discriminatory treatment or not, the Directive cannot be invoked purely on the basis that the Administration has failed to implement a provision currently in force. What the Legal State Council meant by this Opinion was that only the possible existence of another more special law that would deal with specific categories of employees of this Ministry would allow someone to invoke the enforcement of Directive in this particular case, and that therefore Law 3304/2005, which is the general legal provision regarding anti-discrimination in Greece, is not enough to play this role.

The new National Action Plan on Human Rights (2013) contains information on various policies and places them in specific human rights categories. Policies concerning age discrimination are not mentioned explicitly; however certain age groups are mentioned in the categories concerning workers’ rights and social security and the protection of vulnerable groups, namely the elderly. The first category makes reference to employment and insurance schemes for people under 25 and people over 55. The category concerning vulnerable groups, lists ongoing policies focused on healthcare offered to older people, pension schemes for those uninsured, including housing. Programmes for the improvement of the standing of older people in the Greek society are also included.

4.7.4 Retirement

In this question it is important to distinguish between pensionable age (the age set by the state, or by employers or by collective agreements, at which individuals become entitled to a state pension, as distinct from the age at which individuals actually retire from work), and mandatory retirement ages (which can be state-imposed, employer-imposed, imposed by an employee’s employment contract or imposed by a collective agreement).

For these questions, please indicate whether the ages are different for women and men.

a) Is there a state pension age, at which individuals must begin to collect their state pensions? Can this be deferred if an individual wishes to work longer, or can a person collect a pension and still work?

Before the new legislative provisions that were introduced in 2010 (see below), the old-age pension was granted after a certain age limit has been reached (55–65 years of age), which varied in relation to each insurance regime and period of work which has been completed (usually between 25 and 35 years of work).

It is usual for banks to define certain age limits for pension purposes which differ between men and women.

The Supreme Court, in its Judgment no. 1785/2001 (see also Supreme Court Judgment no. 593/1996), decided that the provision of Law 3198/1955 was contrary to the principle of equality declared in the Greek Constitution, and to Article 15 of Law 1414/1984, because it permitted the termination of women’s employment contracts and their professional careers against their will, on terms different to those for men and based on grounds of sex.

On 26 March 2009 the European Court of Justice, in the case C-559/07 (“Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic”) declared that, by maintaining in force provisions which provide for differences between male and female workers with regard to retirement age and minimum required service under the Greek Civil and Military Pensions Code instituted by Presidential Decree No 166/2000 of 3 July 2000, in the version applicable to the present case, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 141 EC.

As a result, Law 3845/2010 has been introduced in July 2010 equalizing the age limits for retirement of men and women and the calculation of pensions.

Serious changes have been made for mothers of under-aged children. The retirement age for them increases by 15 years and the needed years to ensure their retirement jumps from 17.5 to 25 years of service. Under the new legislation now in force, pensions will not be given before the age of 60 years. Even reduced pensions are adjusted to this age limit and the difference in retirement years for the parents of more than three children is no longer valid.

There is a mandatory retirement for civil servants (67 years of age after the completion of 40 years of service for a full pension or 62 years of age after the completion of 15 years of service for a reduced pension). The above provisions apply also for the employees in the private sector as far as the establishment of their right to pension is concerned, but there is no mandatory retirement for them.

It is noteworthy to mention that people of older age groups choose often to retire early or are subject to negative treatment, or feelings of educational insecurity and limited occupational agility.

166 Article 1, par. IA.4 of Law 4093/2012 (O.G. 222 , Volume A – 12.11.2012.)
The advanced age of certain workers has in the past constituted a reason for being laid off. There are cases where workers have reached the age for full pension and have been dismissed on this basis. This puts workers in a worse position than those that have reached a full pension age, but are nonetheless fired on other grounds (allowing them to claim compensation in addition to the pension). Older people are forced to overcome difficulties concerning their access or reintegration into the job market, either because they have been unemployed for a long time, they were fired a few years before their retirement age or because of the lack of adequate infrastructure for the care of vulnerable groups.

b) Is there a normal age when people can begin to receive payments from occupational pension schemes and other employer-funded pension arrangements? Can payments from such occupational pension schemes be deferred if an individual wishes to work longer, or can an individual collect a pension and still work?

Yes, the normal age used to be 60 years for all sectors and was the same for men and women.

However, Law 4093/2012 established the 62th year of age and the completion of 40 years of employment as a necessary condition for retirement for all men and women who are entitled for pensions since the date of 1st January 2013. Additionally, it established the 67th year of age if the number of years of employment amount to fifteen (15).

c) Is there a state-imposed mandatory retirement age(s)? Please state whether this is generally applicable or only in respect of certain sectors, and if so please state which. Have there been recent changes in this respect or are any planned in the near future?

There is a mandatory retirement age of 67 years for certain public servants, both men and women (e.g. university professors, judges).

d) Does national law permit employers to set retirement ages (or ages at which the termination of an employment contract is possible) by contract, collective bargaining or unilaterally?

167 Decision 33/2006 of the Authority for Personal Data Protection. In the present case, the employer of an enterprise requested the information of his workers in order to distinguish those that were over the age limit of forced retirement. The Authority stated that this was clearly discriminatory on grounds of age.

168 Information in this Section was taken from: “50+”, Position Paper on Active and Healthy Aging (2013).

There are actually company operating manuals or corporate charters (mainly of banks and state enterprises) which provide for different retirement age limits based on gender (women having to retire at a lower age), but these provisions have become obsolete in compliance with Article 26 of Law 3304/2005 and in general, no such discriminatory clauses are currently being stipulated. On the other hand, under the terms of collective labour agreements, other binding regulatory provisions still exist (mainly the afore-mentioned bank corporate charters), which permit employers to require employees to retire because they have reached a certain age limit. Nevertheless, in terms of Law 3304/2005 (Article 26) these provisions are considered null and void, as not being in conformity with its requirements. In this respect, the law on protection against dismissal could apply to all workers, irrespective of age, although – as has been stressed before – these issues have not yet been properly and seriously examined.

e) Does the law on protection against dismissal and other laws protecting employment rights apply to all workers irrespective of age, if they remain in employment, or are these rights lost on attaining pensionable age or another age (please specify)?

The law on protection against dismissal applies to all workers, irrespective of age.

f) Is your national legislation in line with the CJEU case law on age (in particular Cases C-229/08 Wolf, C-499/08 Andersen, C-144/04 Mangold and C-555/07 Kücküdevici C-87/06 Pascual García [2006], and cases C-411/05 Palacios de la Villa [2007], C-488/05 The Incorporated Trustees of the National Council on Ageing (Age Concern England) v. Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform [2009], C-45/09, Rosenbladt [2010], C-250/09 Georgiev, C-159/10 Fuchs, C-447/09, Prigge [2011]) regarding compulsory retirement?

Generally, it is believed that Greek national legislation is in line with CJEU case law, but compare above 2.7.1.

4.7.5 Redundancy

a) Does national law permit age or seniority to be taken into account in selecting workers for redundancy?

Criteria of age and seniority were established by the Greek Supreme Court (Άρειος Πάγος) in a way which now seems not to be compliant with the Directive. According to this jurisprudence (Supreme Court Judgments no. 668/2000, 279/1996 and 744/1992), for a redundancy not to be generally considered to be abusive, age and seniority must be taken into account by the employer when he makes an employee redundant.
b) If national law provides compensation for redundancy, is this affected by the age of the worker?

As far as compensation for redundancy is concerned, this is affected by the number of years the employee has worked for one employer. (It could be said that, in this way, compensation is indirectly affected by the age of the worker.).

4.8 Public security, public order, criminal offences, protection of health, protection of the rights and freedoms of others (Article 2(5), Directive 2000/78)

Does national law include any exceptions that seek to rely on Article 2(5) of the Employment Equality Directive?

Yes, national law includes exceptions which seek to rely on Article 2(5) of the Framework Employment Directive. Migrant workers may be expelled if their presence in Greece poses a threat to public order or if they are in breach of Law 2910/2001 on entry and stay of aliens in Greek territory.

4.9 Any other exceptions

Please mention any other exceptions to the prohibition of discrimination (on any ground) provided in national law.

Exceptions to the equality norm are not defined in Greek legislation. The courts would accept exceptions only in cases where they find that discrimination is not arbitrary, or that the application of formal equality would cause substantial inequality (positive action, see below).

On the subject of the interpretation of disability discrimination, Greek law, as previously stated, is silent. It is therefore evident that concepts such as indirect discrimination, failure to provide reasonable accommodation, genuine and determining occupational requirements and the like are not discussed, questioned or claimed. With regard to the system of compulsory placement (quotas), employers are given little leeway in avoiding the obligations imposed. They cannot refuse to employ compulsorily placed disabled persons, unless they invoke and can prove exceptionally bad economic conditions prevailing in their enterprise over the previous two years.170

170 A Special State Committee decides these placement. Unwilling employers can lodge an appeal, but in the vast majority of cases these are decided in favour of the beneficiary/disabled person.
5 POSITIVE ACTION (Article 5 Directive 2000/43, Article 7 Directive 2000/78)

a) What scope does national law provide for taking positive action in respect of racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation? Please refer to any important case law or relevant legal/political discussions on this topic.

The adoption of positive measures for promoting equality is an obligation imposed upon the State by virtue of Article 116(2) of the revised Greek Constitution.

This provision, in conjunction with Articles 21(3) and 21(6) of the Constitution, is perceived as guaranteeing the principle of ‘proportional equality’ (αρχή της αναλογικής ισότητας) and assisting in the ‘elimination of existing inequalities’.

Even though the main preoccupation of the Greek Constitution of 2001 is obviously the promotion and protection of women’s rights, the wording of the new Article 116(2) is all-inclusive, laying down a state obligation to act through positive measures for the elimination of all kinds of ‘inequalities’, a term that undoubtedly pertains to discrimination on racial or ethnic grounds as well.

As far as positive action and special measures are concerned, Law 3304/2005 transposes the Directives in Articles 6 and 12, which provide that adopting or maintaining special measures to prevent or compensate for disadvantages linked to racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation will not be considered to be discrimination.

Greek case-law, especially that of the Greek Council of State, even before the above novel provision of the Constitution, accepted and established the legitimacy of legislative or administrative measures of affirmative action aimed at the advancement of gender equality in Greece. The majority opinion of the Greek Council of State in its judgment 1917/1998\(^{171}\) explicitly recognised that there may be cases which show that in practice a certain category of individuals has been discriminated against ‘due to social prejudice’, leading to only nominal equality. Concomitantly, this court stated that the spirit of Articles 4(1) and 4(2) of the Greek Constitution (the latter provision stating that ‘Greek men and women have equal rights and obligations’) in principle allows the state to take appropriate and necessary ‘affirmative action’ for a certain period of time, until the existing situation of inequality has ceased. The Greek Council of State concluded that, in principle, it would certainly be legitimate for the Greek state to adopt ‘positive measures’ for women, in so far as these measures aim at ‘accelerating the restoration of de facto equality between men and women’.

This jurisprudence was affirmed by the same court’s Judgment 1933/1998, where ‘affirmative action’ in favour of women by the State was regarded as justified and founded not only on the Greek Constitution, but also on Council Directive 76/207/EEC on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion, and working conditions (Article 2(4)), as well as on Article 4(1) of the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women 1979 (ratified by Greece). The wording of the Greek Supreme Administrative Court judgments is almost identical to that of the UN Convention provision. This significant case-law, along with the new constitutional provision of Article 116(2), should certainly be regarded as a basis for the establishment of positive action by Greece in favour of racial and ethnic groups which are discriminated against de facto and/or de iure.

b) Do measures for positive action exist in your country? Which are the most important? Please provide a list and short description of the measures adopted, classifying them into broad social policy measures, quotas, or preferential treatment narrowly tailored. Refer to measures taken in respect of all five grounds, and in particular refer to the measures related to disability and any quotas for access of people with disabilities to the labour market, any related to Roma and regarding minority rights-based measures.

The Greek state has actually followed the practice of positive action in favour of the ‘Moslem minority’ (mainly of Turkish origin) in Thrace (NE Greece), a sui generis ethno-religious minority population whose status is regulated in principle by Section III (Protection of Minorities, Articles 37–45) of the Treaty of Lausanne (1923).

The Lausanne Treaty has been a significant agreement aiming at the effective protection of the ‘Moslem minority’ in Greece and the ‘non-Moslem’ minority in Turkey. Despite the reference to a religious characteristic, the above treaty in fact provides for the protection of ethnic groups, that is of ethnic Greeks in Turkey and of ethnic Turks in Greece. Although the Lausanne Treaty belongs to the League of Nations Treaty category of the interwar period that ceased to apply after World War II, both Greece and Turkey have time and again declared their adherence to this instrument, since it provides for respect by both countries of the civil and political rights of their respective minorities.¹⁷⁴

Under the Lausanne Treaty and by virtue of a series of Greek statutory provisions the ‘Moslem [Turkish] minority’ in Thrace has special protected status in issues regarding education and religion. According to Greek state data there are currently 227 minority primary schools in Thrace, with 422 Muslim teachers.

There are also two minority secondary schools in the same area, while a ‘special quota of 0.5% has been established for the admission of minority students to Greek higher education institutions’.¹⁷⁵

A reform project of the Greek Ministry of Education (through the University of Athens), partially financed by the EU, regarding Turkish minority education in western Thrace has been under way since 1997.¹⁷⁶ According to the Greek Ministry of Education this positive action (‘positive discrimination’ in the words of the Ministry) has led to an increase of 70% in the rates of Muslim children in Greek state high schools, rising from 1 397 in 1997 to 2 395 in 2000.¹⁷⁷ At the same time, the Ministry of Education is reportedly attempting to recruit more Muslim teachers for minority schools, a development that may well contribute to the quality of the teaching services provided in these schools. Members of the Muslim minorities are entitled to the same protection of their human rights as that of the majority of the Greek population.¹⁷⁸ It should be stressed that the ‘Muslim minority’ is considered as a religious minority and not an ethnic one, despite the Lausanne Treaty.

The educational programme for the Muslim minority in the province of Thrace, includes a set of actions targeting areas with high percentage of school dropout, namely the Muslim Roma settlements. In 2012 it reported providing services to 604 students of preschool age in 5 kindergartens and 2 primary schools including these in the large settlements of Drossero/Xanthi and Avantos/Alexandroupoli. Additional support structures (KEPSEM), with mobile units in the same region, reported that 101 children of preschool age have attended extra curriculum programmes.¹⁷⁹

promoting the right to education of alien immigrants, refugees and immigrants of Greek origin in Greece. Law 2413/1996 introduced ‘intercultural education’ for the first time in Greece. As a consequence, in the academic year 2000–2001 there were 23 intercultural schools, 422 reception classes and 556 special education classes of any grade.

The Ministry of Education has applied a protective policy for children of the vulnerable social groups mentioned above, allowing registration in schools even in cases where children do not produce all necessary registration documents. In addition, special language classes for adult aliens have been organised by the Universities of Athens, Thessaloniki, Patras, Ioannina and Crete.\textsuperscript{180}

Article 18 of Law 2646/1998 provides for the adoption by the Greek State of measures for the protection of vulnerable population groups ‘in situations of emergency’, such as Roma, Convention refugees, humanitarian refugees and asylum seekers. A special ‘social solidarity’ programme that covers these groups was initiated by the Ministry of Labour in 2001.\textsuperscript{181} No evaluation report has ever been prepared on this special ‘social solidarity’ programme.

On 7 September 2011 a draft law on the designation of a suitable location for the construction of a mosque in the Eleonas district in downtown Athens was passed in the Greek Parliament with an extended majority vote.\textsuperscript{182} The Mosque, which will not feature minarets, is to be housed on a plot of land formerly belonging to the navy, west of central Athens. However, the prospect of a Mosque in Athens was vehemently opposed by nationalist groups, which have launched numerous attacks against groups of Muslims in recent months, especially in central Athens, where their vast majority lives. The Law also repeats the content of the Article 3 of the previous Law 3512/2006 which describes the establishment of a legal body of private law under the name “Administering Committee of Islamic Mosque of Athens” and its work will be the management of the Mosque. According to the law 3512/2006, the operation costs of the Mosque will be covered by the funding of the Ministry of Education but also from endowments, donations and every kind of offers of natural persons or legal entities.

The passing of the Law satisfies a longstanding demand for an official place of worship from the country’s growing Muslim population, whose needs to date have been accommodated by makeshift Mosques in apartments or disused warehouses. It also puts Athens – the only capital from among the original 15 member states of the European Union not to have a mosque – in line with its European partners. The non-existence of a Mosque was considered to reflect a \textit{discriminatory attitude} towards Muslims on behalf of the Greek government during the previous years since according to unofficial data, there are about 500,000 Muslims in Attica, who had been carrying their religious rituals and celebrations in inappropriate places such as basements and garages because plans for Mosque had not been implemented while painters and builders were taking the role of imams. In addition the lack of a Mosque often led to tensions that had been escalating recently in some neighbourhoods of Athens between local Greeks and immigrants as Muslims praying in open areas such as Attica Square had been harassed. It is obvious that such harassing incidents contributed to the creation of a hostile discriminatory atmosphere against Muslims who could not enjoy fully their right to religious freedom and worship, since having numerous people praying peacefully in public spaces is not – and could not be - prohibited by any law (except if a specific crime is committed, e.g obstruction of circulation).

Sections 2 and 3 of Article 21 of the Greek Constitution constitute the cornerstone of legislation advancing affirmative action for the benefit of persons with disabilities, i.e. special welfare and social security benefits, price reductions, wage subsidies, compulsory placement and employment quotas.

With regard to persons with disabilities, measures aimed at creating or maintaining legal provisions on the protection of health and safety in the working environment or for the promotion and the safeguard of their integration into occupation and employment do not constitute discrimination.

In the field of employment, the principle of positive action is set out in Law 2643/1998 on the compulsory placement of special groups of workers. This law obliges employers employing 50 workers or more, to take on disabled workers placed by the public authorities.

The law gives people with disabilities first priority over all other protected special groups (chiefly persons with four or more children) in the public sector, and second priority in the private sector. As demand exceeds the number of vacancies, specific tests are applied for selection and recruitment, mainly age, severity of disability,

183 This law is new. It was introduced and enacted in 1998, but the first appointments started at the beginning of 2000. This law replaced Law 1648/1986, which had revised quota arrangements and had extended the quota system to the private sector. Further, the quota system was revised by Law 3096/1991 and amended in 1994.

184 Such enterprises are considered very large in Greece and there are few of them (mainly public enterprises, such as electricity or water supply enterprises and the like). Eighty per cent of Greek enterprises employ less than 10 workers.

185 This law is certainly not an anti-discrimination law, but it is widely understood as a re-integration law.

186 In the public sector and local authorities, a considerable proportion of vacancies (up to 80%) in special occupations, such as messengers, night watchmen, cleaners and receptionists, are reserved for disabled individuals.
qualifications, personal status and economic conditions. An extremely limited number of people with disabilities are placed following the above procedure.\textsuperscript{187}

The Manpower Employment Organisation (OAED), based on a ministerial decision issued annually,\textsuperscript{188} is implementing a programme, which may have a bigger impact in getting people with disabilities to work in private sector companies only.

It offers wage subsidies to employers hiring registered people with disabilities\textsuperscript{189} over a maximum period of three years, which is a substantial length of time. This programme is considered to have been successful.

There is no doubt that it offers incentives to employers to hire disabled individuals; however the subsidised posts are limited compared to the total numbers of persons with disabilities seeking jobs, or wishing to enter or re-enter the labour market.\textsuperscript{190}

In relation to Roma, in late 2001 the Greek National Commission for Human Rights pinpointed a series of issues relating to grave \textit{de facto} discrimination against members of the Roma population in Greece in fields such as housing, health, education and civil status.\textsuperscript{191}

In 15 January 2009\textsuperscript{192} the Greek National Commission for Human Rights (NCHR) submitted to the government a new consultative proposal concerning the combat against social exclusion of Roma. Firstly, it urged the government to inaugurate a reliable system of data collection so that all the existing social needs of Roma could be thoroughly registered. Secondly, according to the opinion of the NCHR, Police forces should accept the fact that social integration of Roma should be a priority. Thirdly, it was stated that participation of Roma themselves in governmental strategies regarding plans that refers to them is necessary. Fourthly, the gender dimension should be taken into account. Moreover, it was emphasised that independent external evaluation of the results of all projects concerning Roma is extremely important. Furthermore, NCHR suggested that more motives should be given to teachers in order to remain for longer periods in schools that have vast number of Roma, whereas authorities should register the exact number of Roma pupils in every area and any form of school segregation should be avoided. It was also pointed out that the successful measure of sociomedical centres that provide Roma with information on health care issues should be strengthened. Finally, NCHR called the government to define clearly all the competences between various public authorities involved in the issues of Roma, since there is confusion in this matter.

Even though the Greek State has pursued a special protection programme promoting Roma social integration since 1996, attaching particular emphasis to education, this has not proved as yet to have had any significant positive effects on the quality of life and human rights protection of Roma in Greece, who remain a rather marginalised ethnic group.

There have been major legislative initiatives of a positive action character taken by the Greek State for Roma, the most important of which are the following:

- Ministerial (Culture) Decision of 25.01.1999 (OJHR B 55), by which a special intercultural office was established in the Ministry of Culture with a view to studying and protecting the culture of Roma in Greece;
- Prime Ministerial Decision 18/2000 (OJHR B 24) by which an interministerial committee was established for the ‘management of issues relating to Greek Roma’. Article 2 of this decision provides for the planning and coordination by the above committee of special legislation and policy for the protection of health, housing, education, employment and ‘cultural development’ of Greek Roma;
- Ministerial Decision (Finance and Interior) 188/2002 (OJHR B 609) on granting 3 500 housing loans to Greek Roma.

Further, according to the latest report (29.3.2006) of the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights:

The biggest single project of the IAP is the plan to give out 9,000 housing loans to Greek homeless Roma families under favourable terms, guaranteed by the Greek State. At the moment of the follow-up visit to Greece 3,708 loans had been drawn out of 5,708 approved applications. Much criticism has been reported to the Commissioner, alleging that an important percentage of the loans was misused for expenses others than housing, with the complicity of non-Roma, that the criteria for attribution were unknown or unclear to the Roma, that one could not see why most of the Action Plan was spent for the benefit of 9,000 out of an estimated 150,000 to 200,000 Roma living in Greece, that in most parts of Greece the sum of 60,000

Euros was insufficient to both purchase the land for a house and pay for the construction of it, etc. The Greek authorities point out that 9,000 loans will benefit some 54,000 individuals, as a Roma family in Greece is, on average, composed of six persons. They also underline that the criteria for attribution and the conditions of the loans have all been published in the official gazette which all Greek citizens have access to; they have also been communicated throughout the country to the institutions in charge of granting the loans.

Moreover, according to the latest ECRI report on Greece, ECRI recommended that the authorities act more vigorously to address the situation of Roma who live in settlements of inadequate standards by, among others, imparting on local authorities their obligations under international and national law, including the Municipal and Communal Law as amended, as concerns housing rights, including the right to non-discrimination. ECRI further recommended cooperation between national and local authorities to set up a coherent strategy to improve the situation concerning these settlements. In its third report, ECRI strongly encouraged the Greek authorities to implement the integrated action programme for Greek Roma in full, particularly by providing all the requisite financial resources. The Inter-Ministerial Committee for Roma is in charge of supervising the implementation of the Integrated Action Plan for Roma. Various programmes have been implemented within the framework of this Action Plan in areas such as education, employment, housing and health, with varying degrees of success.

ECRI noted that a more systematic, gradual and continuous monitoring and assessment of the implementation of the Integrated Action Plan for Roma is necessary as the results of this plan are not always easy to establish, especially at the local level. For example, as concerns the housing loan scheme created within the framework of the Integrated Action Plan for Roma, it appears that the intended beneficiaries have not always benefited from it. ECRI is further not aware of whether statistical data is collected on the situation of Roma for the purpose of evaluating the results of the Integrated Action Plan. This type of data is crucial to the success of any measures taken. The full participation of Roma at all the stages of the implementation of the Integrated Action Plan is equally important to its success. In this regard, ECRI notes that the Greek National Commission for Human Rights, having set up an ad hoc working group with national authorities and Roma participation, has made a number of recommendations on government policies, including on the Integrated Action Plan for Roma as concerns the discrimination and social exclusion faced by Roma. ECRI strongly recommended the creation of more systematic and long-term mechanisms for monitoring and evaluating the implementation of the Integrated Action Plan in order to assess results and make any necessary adjustments. ECRI recommended that Roma representatives be involved in this process. Finally, ECRI urged the Greek authorities to take further measures to improve the integration of vulnerable groups such as Roma, the Muslim minority in Western Thrace and immigrants into the labour market. It recommends that combating discrimination, strengthening measures taken to provide vocational training and language lessons, and reinforcing the role of the Labour Inspectorate form part of a comprehensive and long-term strategy to that end.

As it is pointed out in the “ECRI’ s Conclusions on the implementation of the recommendations in respect of Greece”\(^{196}\) subject to interim follow-up”, adopted on 22 June 2012, the Greek authorities have informed ECRI that, although there are no systematic and long-term audit and evaluation mechanisms of the implementation of the Integrated Action Plan for the Social Integration of Roma (2002-2008), the Ministry of the Interior has created a database on housing loans granted and infrastructure projects funded thereunder. The Greek authorities have also informed ECRI that the lessons learned from the first plan (importance of systematic on-going control and need to avoid lacunae in the programming period and fragmentary actions) have helped them to devise the National Roma Integration Strategy which they submitted to the European Commission on 30 December 2011. In this connection, the Ministry of the Interior has requested the Ombudsman’s assistance with a view to improving its systems for collecting and processing data. It is also expected that the Kallikratis plan for administrative reform (adopted by virtue of law no. 3852/2010) and the restructuring of the ministries responsible for Roma issues will provide an impetus for creating adequate audit and evaluation mechanisms. According to the ECRI’ s Conclusions, the Ombudsman has proposed in this respect the creation of a national coordination mechanism for the systematic and long-term monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of specific action plans. She has emphasised that it is crucial to involve civil society and the Roma themselves. To conclude, ECRI noted that, although its recommendation of the year 2009 has yet not been fully complied with, the authorities intend to create an audit and evaluation mechanism and have drawn up a new strategy for Roma. Moreover, ECRI wishes to highlight the Ombudsman’s call for more systematic and long-term monitoring and evaluation mechanisms and her emphasis on the need to involve civil society and the Roma.

The “ESTIA” (“home” in Greek) project, which aspires to provide smooth integration of around 550,000 legal immigrants residing in Greece, was presented by Interior Minister Prokopis Pavlopoulos at an event on March 3 2009.

The “Integrated Action Plan for the unimpeded integration of third country nationals legally residing throughout the Greek territory—ESTIA” is financed by the European Fund for the Integration of Third-Country Nationals 2007-2013.

These social groups are targeted by Ministerial Decision 308/2001 (OJHR B 784) which provides for the development of special labour inclusion projects by the Greek Manpower Organisation (OAED).

The same groups are in fact covered by another similar Ministerial Decision (112852/2002. OJHR B 786), aiming at the protection and advancement of unemployed or under-employed members of the above social groups in the labour markets in Greek regions. Article 5(1) of this decision makes express reference to ‘special cultural groups (e.g. Roma – Thrace Pomaks)’.

By article 44 of Law 3943/2011197 the Greek Federation of Persons with Disabilities became a member of the Economic and Social Council of Greece.198 From 01.01.2011 the Centre for Disability Certification is established in the Social Insurance Institute (IKA). The Centre comes under the Directorate for Disability and Medicine Labour of the Social Insurance Institute and aims to ensure uniformity in determining the extent of disability for each person.199

On 12 April 2012, the Deputy Minister of Administration Reform and Electronic Governance issued Decision F.40.4./1/989200 on the Framework of Electronic Governance Services regarding the public sector. The Decision provides that public websites must comply with the standards of Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG), Version 2.0, compliance level at least ‘AA’ and recommends that they comply with standards of Accessibility Guidelines Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG), version 2.0, compliance level at least ‘AAA’. Following these guidelines will make content accessible to a wider range of people with disabilities, including blindness and low vision, deafness and hearing loss, etc.

On 4 May 2012 the new Uniform Table on Disability Percentages was issued.201 According to the National Confederation of Disabled People there are important positive changes in the percentages of disability in some categories of permanent disability.202 Due to these changes the system of designation of disability has been 198 Article 82, paragraph 3 of the Constitution provides that “The law determines the issues related to the formation, operation and competencies of the Economic and Social Council, whose mission is to conduct the social dialogue on the country’s general policy and in particular on economic and social policy guidelines, as well as to formulate opinions on government bills or MPs’ law proposals referred to it.” Law 2232/1994 (OG A 140).

improved since a new list of special diseases that had not been characterised as disabilities in the past was included, and, also, because other forms of disability were “upgraded” in a way to reflect officially a higher “level of seriousness”. This constitutes a positive measure on behalf of the government, because a wider variety of groups that were vulnerable but not protected is now entitled to rights such as the reception of financial benefits that are related to the “level of seriousness” of each disability.

A very important step in combating racism was the introduction of a Presidential Decree, on the establishment of Offices and Departments specifically for the combating of racial violence. This was an initiative of the Ministry of Public Order and Civil Protection that set up these Offices and Departments on racial violence at every police station in the country. Educational programmes for the police staff are carried out to keep them informed on issues of racial violence. What is more, a special hotline was set up to receive complaints on cases of racial violence on a 24-hour basis and with respect to the anonymity and privacy of the complainants. However, more effort is needed for undocumented migrants that constitute the majority of victims of racial violence. This group, out of fear of deportation, refrain from reporting any incidents targeted against them or witnessed by them. The prosecutor, in fact, may decide to halt the deportation process, however, in practice, this rarely happens.

The new National Action Plan on Human Rights includes a list of pending policies for the combating of racial discrimination, the revision of the institutional framework for awarding citizenship; simplifying the legislative framework for immigration; drafting a new National Plan Integration of Immigrants; action for the proper functioning of the Departments and Office of Racial Violence; systematic recording and processing of racial violence; update and issue circular orders to deal with racist incidents; create channels of cooperation between the Greek Police and other agencies and special education programmes for the staff in management practices of racial phenomena; and organising educational seminars for judges and prosecutors.

204 Art. 44 (b), of Law 3386/2005 as amended by 3907/2011. This was only applied to the victims of the Manolada shootings in 2013. This provision, however, does not cover witnesses.
6  REMEDIES AND ENFORCEMENT

6.1 Judicial and/or administrative procedures (Article 7 Directive 2000/43, Article 9 Directive 2000/78)

In relation to each of the following questions please note whether there are different procedures for employment in the private and public sectors.

a) What procedures exist for enforcing the principle of equal treatment (judicial/administrative/alternative dispute resolution such as mediation)?

A victim of discrimination in the private sector, including the field of employment, can raise a complaint before the Greek civil courts (Articles 13-14 of the anti-discrimination law, Law 3304/2005) and penal courts (Article 16 of Law 3304/2005).

A victim in the public sector, including the field of employment, can raise a complaint not only before the Greek civil and penal courts but also before the administrative courts.

People with disabilities are entitled to request information to be supplied and/or trials be held using alternative formats, e.g. sign language, information in Braille. All the courts are physically accessible to people with disabilities (e.g. wheelchair users).

According to article 44 of Law 3386/2005 as amended by article 42 of Law 3907/2011 victims of criminal acts provided for by articles 1 and of the basic antiracist Law 927/1979 and article 16 of Law 3304/2005, in case criminal prosecution has been initiated, may be granted a residence permit for humanitarian grounds until the issue of the judgment. In case the victims are under medical treatment the duration of the permit is extended until the treatment is completed, regardless of its relation to the crime.

b) Are these binding or non-binding?

The above procedures are binding for both the private and the public sector.

c) What is the time limit within which a procedure must be initiated?

Time limits are very strict (three months), regardless of sector.

d) Can a person bring a case after the employment relationship has ended?

206 Law 927/1979 (OG A 139/28.6.1979) titled “Penal sanction of acts aiming at discrimination based on race”.

Of course a person can bring a case after the employment relationship has ended, in both the private and public sectors.

e) In relation to the procedures described, please indicate any costs or other barriers litigants will face (e.g. necessity to instruct a lawyer?) and any other factors that may act as deterrents to seeking redress (e.g. strict time limits, complex procedures, location of court or other relevant body).

The principal barrier that the litigants face is the necessity to instruct a lawyer, because the fees are very high for the victim. It is important to note that, although Article 13(3) of Law 3304/2005 provides that:

legal entities which have a legitimate interest in ensuring that the principle of equal treatment is applied regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation can represent the person wronged before any court and any administrative authority with the written consent of the person wronged.

There are no instances in 2013 or in other previous years of NGOs and trade unions deciding to support victims of discrimination.

Moreover, the fact that since 30 January 2011, with the Ministerial Decision KYA 123827//23-12-2010, the fee that has to be paid to the police in order to register a complaint has been increased by 900% (100 euro instead of 10 euro) seems to constitute a deterrent to seeking redress.

f) Are there available statistics on the number of cases related to discrimination brought to justice? If so, please provide recent data.

There are no available statistics on the number of cases related to discrimination brought to justice.

g) Are discrimination cases registered as such by national courts? (by ground? Field?) Are these data available to the public?

No, discrimination cases are not registered as such by national courts.

6.2 Legal standing and associations (Article 7(2) Directive 2000/43, Article 9(2) Directive 2000/78)

Please list the ways in which associations may engage in judicial or other procedures

a) Are associations entitled to act on behalf of victims of discrimination? (to represent a person, company, organisation in court)
Yes, they are entitled to act on behalf of victims, according to Art.13, par.3, of Law 3304/2005 (under the conditions described below at 5.2.c).

b) Are associations entitled to act in support of victims of discrimination? (to join already existing proceedings)

Yes, they are entitled to act in support of victims by joining already existing proceedings, according to the Art. 82 of the Code of Civil Procedure that provides the possibility of “additional intervention” in a court process (but certainly under the strict general requirements laid down by the Article 62 of the Code concerning “legitimate interest” etc – see below at 5.2.d).

c) What types of entities are entitled under national law to act on behalf or in support of victims of discrimination? (please note that these may be any association, organisation, trade union, etc.).

The number of categories of legal entities that are given the possibility to defend the victims of discrimination is very restricted, since it includes only the ones that have as statutory aim the guarantee and protection of the principle of equal treatment (art.13, par.3, Law 3304/2005). There has been no broad interpretation of this article so far in a way that any organisation involved in human rights issues could be legitimised. As for the kind of legal entities, current legislation does not specify, and therefore all forms described in the Civil Code fall, in theory, within the scope of national law (associations, non profit organisations, syndicates and unions of persons).

d) What are the respective terms and conditions under national law for associations to engage in proceedings on behalf and in support of complainants? Please explain any difference in the way those two types of standing (on behalf/in support) are governed. In particular, is it necessary for these associations to be incorporated/registered? Are there any specific chartered aims an entity needs to have; are there any membership or permanency requirements (a set number of members or years of existence), or any other requirement (please specify)? If the law requires entities to prove “legitimate interest”, what types of proof are needed? Are there legal presumptions of “legitimate interest”?

The criteria demanded within the framework of the requirements of Law 3304/2005, in combination with the general requirements laid down by Greek procedural statutes (Article 62 of the Code of Civil Procedure), are:

- that NGOs and/or trade unions have ‘a legitimate interest in ensuring the application of the principle of equal treatment’. This means that any intervening organisations should have as their objective the effective implementation of the principles laid down by the law.
that the victim has given his/her consent to the organisation, stating that he/she wants and agrees to be represented by that organisation. It goes without saying that in conformity with the Greek Code of Civil Procedure, the NGO or trade union will act before the court through an accredited lawyer.

e) Where entities act on behalf or in support of victims, what form of authorization by a victim do they need? Are there any special provisions on victim consent in cases, where obtaining formal authorization is problematic, e.g. of minors or of persons under guardianship?

The only form of authorization that is allowed is either an official notary document or a private document authorised for the original character of the signature (article 13, par 3 of the Law 3304/2005). There are no special provisions on victim consent in cases, where obtaining formal authorization is problematic.

f) Is action by all associations discretionary or do some associations have a legal duty to act under certain circumstances? Please describe.

Action by all associations is discretionary.

h) What types of proceedings (civil, administrative, criminal, etc.) may associations engage in? If there are any differences in associations’ standing in different types of proceedings, please specify.

Associations may engage in all types of proceedings (civil, administrative, criminal), according to the article 13, par 3 of the Law 3304/2005.

h) What type of remedies may associations seek and obtain? If there are any differences in associations’ standing in terms of remedies compared to actual victims, please specify.

A victim of discrimination in the private sector, including the field of employment, can raise a complaint before the Greek civil courts (Articles 13-14 of the anti-discrimination Law 3304/2005) and penal courts in the case of refusal of provision of goods and services (Article 16 of the Law 3304/2005). Administrative sanctions (Article 17 of the Law 3304/2005) are imposed on employers who discriminate on conditions related to occupation (including selection criteria, recruitment conditions and promotion, working life and firement) since they are considered to be a violation of the labour law in the sense of the Article 16 par1A of the Law 2639/1998 (imposition of a fine). A victim in the public sector, including the field of employment, can raise a complaint not only before the Greek civil and penal courts but also before the administrative courts.

i) Are there any special rules on the shifting burden of proof where associations are engaged in proceedings?
There are no special rules on the shifting burden of proof where associations are engaged in proceedings.

j) Does national law allow associations to act in the public interest on their own behalf, without a specific victim to support or represent (actio popularis)? Please describe in detail the applicable rules, including the types of associations having such standing, the conditions for them to meet, the types of proceedings they may use, the types of remedies they may seek, and any special rules concerning the shifting burden of proof.

Actio popularis is not allowed in the Greek legal system.

k) Does national law allow associations to act in the interest of more than one individual victim (class action) for claims arising from the same event? Please describe in detail the applicable rules, including the types of associations having such standing, the conditions for them to meet, the types of proceedings they may use, the types of remedies they may seek, and any special rules concerning the shifting burden of proof.

Class actions are not possible in Greece.

Does national law require or permit a shift of the burden of proof from the complainant to the respondent? Identify the criteria applicable in the full range of existing procedures and concerning the different types of discrimination, as defined by the Directives (including harassment).

Greek national law permits a shift of the burden of proof from the complainant to the respondent.

The burden of proof in cases of violation of the anti-discrimination law appears in Article 14 of Law 3304/2005, which stipulates:

1. When persons who consider themselves wronged because the principle of equal treatment has not been applied to them establish, before a court or other competent authority, facts from which it may be presumed that there has been direct or indirect discrimination, it shall be for the respondent to prove that there has been no breach of the principle of equal treatment;
2. Paragraph 1 shall not apply to criminal procedures;
3. Paragraph 1 shall also apply in the case of Paragraph 1 of Article 13.

(In cases of non-compliance with the principle of equal treatment within the framework of an administrative action, the victim has the protection — in addition to judicial protection — granted by Articles. 24–27 of the Code of Administrative Procedure.)
There was no provision for shift of the burden of proof before Law 3304/2005 was enacted.

What protection exists against victimisation? Does the protection against victimisation extend to people other than the complainant? (e.g. witnesses, or someone who helps the victim of discrimination to bring a complaint).

Protection against victimisation includes such measures as are necessary to protect employees against dismissal or other adverse treatment by the employer as a reaction to a complaint within the workplace, or to any legal proceedings aimed at enforcing compliance with the principle of equal treatment (Article 15 of Law 3304/2005). In cases of adverse treatment or an adverse consequence in reaction to a complaint or proceedings aimed at enforcing compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the field of racial or ethnic discrimination, the scope is wider than employment and occupation and covers all persons, as regards both the public and private sectors, in relation to the eight points given in Article 2(2)(a-h) of the Racial Equality Directive 2000/43/EC.

Witnesses, as they play the most crucial role in supplying evidence under Article 14 of Law 3304/2005, could easily be considered as ‘protected persons’, as they fall within the definition of ‘person’ in Article 15, which provides that protection includes protection from dismissal or adverse treatment of a person as a reaction to a complaint or proceedings aimed at enforcing compliance with the principle of equal treatment.

According to the wording of Law 3304/2005, the reversal of the burden of proof also applies to victimisation.

Furthermore, the new Law 4139 /2013, under the title “Narcotic Acts and other provisions” (see below Annex 1), amends Article 79(3), which now also forbids the suspension of the sentence in cases where bias motivation has been established as an aggravating circumstance, and therefore it introduces more severe punishment of bias motivation for crimes against groups susceptible to discrimination. Moreover, after discussions with LGBT organisations, the new Law added, for the first time in the Greek legal order, the notion of “gender identity”, in order to protect in a more specific way transgender persons who often tend to fall victims of violence. In the first draft of the bill, prohibition of conversion of a prison sentence into a fine had been included as well, but it was finally omitted in the latest version of the text after reactions on behalf of several Members of Parliament. Although racial motivation is specifically punished since 2008, this provision has not once been applied in the four years since its introduction. In particular, in a letter sent to the Minister of Justice on 208 http://www.ministryofjustice.gr/site/LinkClick.aspx?fileticket=YTYbJcYuEkI%3D&tabid=132.

1st March 2013, the international organisation “Human Rights Watch” claimed that it spoke recently with eight senior prosecutors and one official in the Justice Ministry and none could cite any cases. The new modification of the Penal Code constitutes a positive step, but while this measure could help ensure that the punishment for racially-motivated violence is commensurate with the crime, it is insufficient to address the failings of the criminal justice system to identify, investigate diligently, and prosecute bias crimes. A critical problem is the fact that racist motivation may only be addressed in the sentencing phase, rather than during the trial for the determination of guilt. This means that police and prosecutors are less likely to investigate potential bias elements of a crime from the outset, making it more difficult to prove racist motivation beyond a reasonable doubt. It is obvious that prosecutors would be more able to ensure proper gathering of evidence and prosecute effectively if bias was an integral part of the legal definition of an offense.

a) What are the sanctions applicable where unlawful discrimination has occurred? Consider the different sanctions that may apply where the discrimination occurs in private or public employment, or in a field outside employment.

According to Article 16 of Law 3304/2005, the violation of the principle of non-discrimination, no matter on which ground and in which field (inside or outside employment), incurs imprisonment of between 6 months and 3 years and a fine of between EUR 1,000 and EUR 5,000.

In addition, according to Article 17 of Law 3304/2005, violation of the principle of non-discrimination incurs a fine imposed by the Work Inspectorate in accordance with Article 16 of Law 2639/1998. This fine is between EUR 500 and EUR 30,000 (ceiling of the maximum amount).

The victim can lodge an action for compensation before the civil courts for infringement of his/her personality rights in cases of ‘unlawful harm’ (Article 57 of the Civil Code).

b) Is there any ceiling on the maximum amount of compensation that can be awarded?

The ceiling on the maximum amount of fine imposed on the discriminator in penal cases is EUR 5,000 (fine to be paid to the State). The ceiling on the maximum amount of fine imposed on those responsible for discrimination in administrative cases is EUR 30,000 (fine to be paid to the State).

In civil cases, the victim can be compensated by the civil courts. In this case, there is no maximum amount of compensation.
c) Is there any information available concerning:

i) the average amount of compensation awarded to victims?

There is no case-law concerning compensation to victims.

ii) the extent to which the available sanctions have been shown to be - or are likely to be - effective, proportionate and dissuasive, as required by the Directives?

There is no information available for the average amount available or the effectiveness of the sanctions.

Greek law expressly provides for a criminal law means of defence and penalties in cases of discrimination on racial, ethnic or religious grounds solely within the framework of Law 927/1979 (see Sections 2(2) and 2(3) on direct and indirect discrimination).

Article 57 of the Greek Civil Code is a generic provision that provides for the protection of every person’s personality in cases of ‘unlawful harm’. This provision entitles the victim to damages and to demand termination of the harm to their personality and its non-repetition in the future. (see Scope of Liability section).

It also includes a court-imposed obligation to refrain from a certain act and/or to perform a certain act, such as to implement desegregation in the fields of housing and education.

In 2001, the Greek National Commission for Human Rights (NCHR) also proposed that Greek anti-racism legislation should expressly provide for vicarious liability in civil, administrative and criminal law. Vicarious liability is currently provided for only by Article 922 of the Greek Civil Code, by virtue of which an employer is held liable for any damage incurred by a third party due to action by that employer’s staff.

With regard to civil and administrative procedures, the NCHR has also proposed that Greek law should provide, in addition to compensations, full restitution and reparation for moral harm. With reference to criminal procedures, the NCHR proposed the introduction of an alternative penalty consisting of the obligation to perform community service.

7 SPECIALISED BODIES, Body for the promotion of equal treatment (Article 13 Directive 2000/43)

When answering this question, if there is any data regarding the activities of the body (or bodies) for the promotion of equal treatment, include reference to this (keeping in mind the need to examine whether the race equality body is functioning properly). For example, annual reports, statistics on the number of complaints received in each year or the number of complainants assisted in bringing legal proceedings.

a) Does a ‘specialised body’ or ‘bodies’ exist for the promotion of equal treatment irrespective of racial or ethnic origin? (Body/bodies that correspond to the requirements of Article 13. If the body you are mentioning is not the designated body according to the transposition process, please clearly indicate so).

Article 18 of Law 3304/2005 entrusts the Economic and Social Committee with tasks such as:

- drafting an annual report on developments with regard to the application of the principle of equal treatment;
- making suggestions to the Government and to Social Partners on promoting equal treatment and non-discrimination;
- encouraging dialogue with NGOs and representative unions which have a legitimate interest in combating discrimination on the grounds of ethnic or racial origin, religion or beliefs, sexual orientation and disability.

The law entrusts three specialised administrative bodies with the promotion of the principle of equal treatment. In February 2010 the National Commission of Human Rights in an analytical report suggested that, based on the experience of previous years, the competences of all existing equality bodies should be merged into one (Ombudsman). The competent Ministry of Justice has not adopted so far this specific proposal of the NCHR, and for the moment there is no public debate on this issue.

b) Describe briefly the status of this body (or bodies) including how its governing body is selected, its sources of funding and to whom it is accountable. Is the independence of the body/bodies stipulated in the law? If not, can the body/bodies be considered to be independent? Please explain why.

210 Constitution, Article 82(3): ‘Matters relating to the establishment, operation and competences of the Economic and Social Committee, the mission of which is the conduct of social dialogue for the overall policy of the Country and especially for the orientations of the economic and social policy, as well as the formulation of opinions on Bills and law proposals referred to it, shall be specified by law.’ The law in force is Law 2232/1994 (it was enacted prior to the 2001 Constitutional Revision, but the new Constitution recognised and upgraded the Committee’s competences).

These bodies are:

A. The Ombudsman

An independent authority, recognised by the 2001 Constitutional Revision.

The annual budget of the Ombudsman was EUR 5.8 million (2004), EUR 5.9 million (2005) and EUR 7.4 million (2006). No information is available for the years 2007, 2008. The annual budget of the year 2009 amounted to EUR 10 million, whereas the budgets of the years 2010 and 2011 were EUR 8.7 million and EUR 7.8 million respectively.\(^{212}\) The data for the year 2012 have not been available yet.

The Office of the Ombudsman has the following staff: 1 director (the Ombudsman, elected by a special committee of Parliament), 5 paid assistants to the Ombudsman, 72 paid staff members who are lawyers, 70 paid staff members who are other academics and 30 other paid staff members.

Citizens have invoked the Ombudsman in hundreds of cases since 1997, and in many cases, he has made the state agencies respect citizens’ rights. It should be noted, however, that most people with disabilities who have lodged complaints with this authority seek to ensure social security or welfare benefits rather than denounce a discriminatory practice against them based on their disability (e.g. dismissal or not employing a person because of his/her disability). However, the Ombudsman has no authority to penalise or to prosecute discriminatory practices, but only to activate governmental bodies to help eliminate the causes and the practice of discrimination. The Ombudsman has carried out a study after accusations were made against a well-known Greek airline company for not taking specific and reasonable measures for disabled persons. The Ombudsman addressed the findings to the Minister of Transport, pointing out that this particular case reflects a political position which does not respect the constitutional right of persons with special needs to autonomous and equitable participation in the social and economic life of the country, and more particularly, the right to access to and travel by public transport. The ministry ‘accepted the position of the Ombudsman and requested in writing from Olympic Airlines SA and Olympic Airways, that they assure the transport of persons with special needs without demanding from them a medical opinion and escort’.

Under the anti-discrimination law, the Ombudsman is competent in regard to the promotion of children’s rights, as well as the implementation of the principle of equal treatment, regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, age, disability or sexual orientation, in the public sector, drafting reports and investigating complaints on violations of this principle (in any field; not only in occupation and employment).

In its 2013 special Annual Report\textsuperscript{214} on discrimination the Greek Ombudsman, as an Equality Body, expresses its strong concern regarding the Greek society’s apparent regression in terms of the alertness required in the essential fight against discrimination.

More extensively, during the year 2013, the Ombudsman investigated 175 cases in which an allegedly discriminatory conduct against one or a number of persons had taken place. Among these cases, there are 73 pending from prior years. Out of the total number, 18 cases were filed because they were deemed beyond the Ombudsman’s competency, unfounded or their investigation was put on hold due to non-submission of evidence by the interested parties. The outcome of 54 cases which were fully investigated in 2013 included in principle positive answers to the requests of the citizens in 20 cases, while in 24 cases the administration refused to comply and in 10 of them it was found that the administrative actions abode by the law. The remaining 103 are still being explored. Pending for a long time are 32 cases which concern mainly Roma’s housing rehabilitation. The significant statistical increase in the number of complaints recorded in the field of discrimination on grounds of disability, occurred due to the Ombudsman’s choice to include in this chapter the case of children with disability, which are primarily related to the non implementation of specific measures envisaged for access to education (special educational support). Concerning Roma the Ombudsman’s report finds that the very harsh living conditions for a large part of this population undermine any effort for designing and implementing solutions for the integration of Greek Roma in the social, economic and political life of the country and fuel their further impoverishment. Under these conditions it is obvious that the involvement or exploitation of this ethnic group’s members by organized criminal rings and “black networks” becomes easier, at significant cost to themselves but also for society as a whole.

The Ombudsman’s Report 2013 emphasized also the fact that when the state cannot ensure for minors and adults Roma the equal enjoyment of their rights to health, education, housing, employment and social participation, there are efforts to substitute the lack of social policies by oppression and ongoing “sweeping” police operations in Roma settlements across the country, which become intensified and receive exceptional coverage. In this way, the focus shifts from the necessity to tackle social exclusion to suppressing crime. These specific police operations end up linking delinquency with Roma’s ethnic group as a whole and not with individual members of it.

Finally, as it is pointed out, in 2013 the Ombudsman received a significant number of reports related to unjustified or poorly reasoned establishing of age limits in employment.

\textsuperscript{214} http://www.synigoros.gr/resources/docs/10-diakriseis.pdf.
B. The Committee for Equal Treatment

This committee was established in 2006 under the provisions of Law 3304/2005 and is supervised by the Minister of Justice.

Its competence is to cover any field with the exception of the public sector, but it does not cover employment and occupation regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, age, disability or sexual orientation. Therefore, it examines complaints on violation of the principle of equal treatment within its field of competence, and will try to conciliate between the conflicting parties. It can also conduct independent surveys concerning discrimination, and publish independent reports and make recommendations concerning discrimination.

The Committee has no authority to impose sanctions of any kind. However, the Committee does have the right to hear witnesses and the right to demand that information be supplied by the accused or by third parties (public authorities or individuals).\(^{215}\)

There is no estimate for the annual budget of the Committee (it is under the general budget of the Ministry of Justice). The Committee has only one paid staff member, who is a lawyer. There is no information available for the number of complaints received by the Committee in 2013.

C. The Labour Inspectorate

This governmental body is active only in the private sector and in the field of employment and occupation regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, age, disability or sexual orientation.

The Labour Inspectorate will act as conciliator between employer and employee and can also impose fines (payable to the State and not to the employee), in cases of a finding of violation of the principle of equal treatment.\(^{216}\)

It can also conduct independent surveys concerning discrimination, and publish independent reports and make recommendations concerning discrimination. The Inspectorate has the right to hear witnesses and the right to demand that information be supplied by the accused or third parties (public authorities or individuals).\(^{217}\) There is no estimation for the annual budget of the Inspectorate (it is under the general budget of the Ministry of Labour).

\(^{215}\) Law 3304/2005, Article 22(2).
\(^{216}\) The fine can then be challenged before an administrative court, but the litigation is not between employer and employee but between employer and the Government.
\(^{217}\) Law 3304/2005, Article 19(3), combined with Article 22(2).
The Labour Inspectorate is a Special Secretariat of the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection and it provides services all over the country. These are 16 directorates of the Social Labour Inspectorate, in which 512 social labour inspectors serve, and there are 7 centres for the prevention of occupational risks, in which 311 technicians and sanitary inspectors serve. Furthermore, the above-mentioned body has 62 members of staff.

The head of the Labour Inspectorate body is the Special Secretary.

Like previous years, there is no official information available for the number of complaints received in 2012, because there is no record of the complaints. However, the Labour Inspectorate Body informed the Greek National Focal Point (N.F.P.) of the E.U. Fundamental Rights Agency that, during 2012, it received 4 complaints from people with disabilities. 3 have been examined, whereas 1 is pending. In one of the cases a 5,000 Euro fine was imposed on the employer for having violated the relevant provision. The Labour Inspectorate Body does not report in its most recent annual report for 2012 the handing of any other complaints related to Law 3304/2005 regarding discrimination, and there are no data available concerning the year 2013.

c) Describe the competences of this body (or bodies), including a reference to whether it deals with other grounds of discrimination and/or wider human rights issues.

‘public sector bodies’ mean?

According to Article 3(1) of Law 3094/2003 (“The Ombudsman and other provisions”):

“The Ombudsman has jurisdiction over issues involving services of:
- a) the public sector,
- b) local and regional authorities,
- c) other public bodies, state private law entities, public corporations, local government enterprises and undertakings whose management is directly or indirectly determined by the state by means of an administrative decision or as a shareholder. Banks and the Athens Stock Exchange are exempted.”

NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

[Article 1, Chapter A (par. 6 i), Law 2667/1998]

According to Law 2667/1998, by which it was established, NCHR, although it does not belong to the three “equality bodies” described in the Law 3304/2005, has the competence to examine the ways in which Greek legislation may be harmonised with the international law standards on human rights protection, and the subsequent submission of relevant non binding opinions to competent State organs.

| d) Does it / do they have the competence to provide independent assistance to victims, conduct independent surveys and publish independent reports, and issue recommendations on discrimination issues? |

| in any field other than employment and occupation ↓ |

| COMMITTEE FOR EQUAL TREATMENT [Article 19(2), Law 3304/2005] |
A. The Ombudsman provides independent legal aid, assistance and general advice to persons who think they have been victims of infringements of the law and discriminatory practices. It can also conduct independent surveys concerning discrimination and publish independent reports and make recommendations concerning discrimination.

B. The Committee for Equal Treatment does not have the competence to provide assistance to victims or to conduct surveys. However, it does have the competence to publish reports and issue recommendations on discrimination issues.

C. The Labour Inspectorate does not provide legal assistance to victims and does not conduct independent surveys because, according to its statute, the Inspectorate is a public, non-independent service and not an independent authority. However, the Inspectorate has the competence to publish reports and issue recommendations on discrimination issues.

e) Are the tasks undertaken by the body/bodies independently (notably those listed in the Directive 2000/43; providing independent assistance to victims of discrimination in pursuing their complaints about discrimination, conducting independent surveys concerning discrimination and publishing independent reports).

A. The work of Ombudsman is undertaken independently. The Ombudsman is elected by a special Committee of the Parliament in accordance with Article 101(3) of the Constitution.

B. There are serious doubts about the independent character of the Committee for Equal Treatment: according to Law 3304/2005, the President of the Committee is the Secretary General of the Ministry of Justice. Unlike the Ombudsman, which is an independent authority according to the Greek Constitution and the Greek legislation, the Committee for Equal Treatment is fully subjected in the structure of a governmental agency such as the Ministry of Justice since its Head is strictly appointed by a Ministerial Decision of the Minister of Justice and functions within the substructure of the relevant Department of Equal Treatment, which is an official branch of the Ministry. This is also the opinion of the Economic and Social Committee of Greece, which is competent to supervise the anti-discrimination legislation and submit an annual report, the Committee for Equal Treatment should become an independent authority with a status similar to the one of Ombudsman.\(^{220}\)

C. There are also serious doubts about the independent character of the Labour Inspectorate because its head is a political person, i.e. the Special Secretary of the Ministry of Social Affairs, who follows the policy of the party in government, and also because it constitutes an organic section of the Ministry where it belongs.

\(^{220}\) http://www.oke.gr/oke_treat.html
f) Does the body (or bodies) have legal standing to bring discrimination complaints or to intervene in legal cases concerning discrimination?

A. The Ombudsman may, during the investigation of cases, request the assistance of the Public Administration Investigators-Inspectors Authority or other auditing bodies of the administration. The Ombudsman may request public services to provide him with any information, document or other evidence relating to the case, and may examine individuals, conduct on-site investigations and order expert reports. The Ombudsman cannot intervene in cases pending before the courts. During the examination of documents and other evidence which are at the disposal of public authorities, the fact that they have been classified as secret may not be invoked, unless they concern issues of national defence, state security and the country's international relations. All public services have an obligation to facilitate the investigation in every possible way.221

B. The Committee for Equal Treatment has no legal standing to bring discrimination complaints or to intervene in legal cases concerning discrimination.

The Labour Inspectorate has legal standing to bring discrimination complaints but has not yet exercised this competence

g) Is / are the body / bodies a quasi-judicial institution? Please briefly describe how this functions. Are the decisions binding? Does the body /bodies have the power to impose sanctions? Is an appeal possible? To the body itself? To courts? Are the decisions well respected? (Please illustrate with examples/decisions).

No, these bodies are not quasi-judicial institutions. The findings of the equality bodies are not legally binding, i.e the respondent party is not compelled to comply with their decisions. (See below : h)

The independence of the Greek Ombudsman is declared in the Article 103, para 9 of the revised Greek Constitution, according to which the Ombudsman functions as an “independent authority”, and is described by the Law 2477/1997, which defines (in Article 1, para 2) that the Ombudsman “is not subjected to any other governmental body or administrative authority”. The two other bodies cannot be considered to be independent, because they constitute organic sections of the Ministries where they belong: the Labour Inspectorate is a branch of the Ministry of Labour and the Committee for Equal Treatment of the Ministry of Justice is subjected to the Department of Equal Treatment (and this means that its members are appointed by the Minister), which is also a branch of the Ministry of Justice.

h) Does the body register the number of complaints and decisions? (by ground, field, type of discrimination, etc.)? Are these data available to the public?

Only the Ombudsman registers the number of complaints and decisions by ground, field, type of discrimination etc. However, the data are available to the public only throughout its annual report.

There is no information on the work either of the Committee for Equal Treatment or of the Labour Inspectorate Body.

i) Does the body treat Roma and Travellers as a priority issue? If so, please summarise its approach relating to Roma and Travellers.

A. In its annual report published online (March 2008),\(^{222}\) the Greek Ombudsman (GO) — the equality body dealing with cases involving Roma housing — bore witness to the national dimensions of the Roma issue as well as to the compelling need to immediately implement multiple targeted programmes of rehabilitation and social support at a local and regional level. Such actions will prove successful only as long as they are mutually combined, coordinated and monitored by a national coordination centre. Moreover, in its annual report published online (March 2009),\(^{223}\) the GO pointed out once again the indifference of the central government to deal seriously with problems of Roma in the fields of education, housing and settlement.

It is also noteworthy that during the release of its 2012 annual Report\(^{224}\) a significantly high number of cases (32) concerning mostly housing issues of Roma populations were still pending. This was due to the structural-systemic character of a continuing discrimination against Roma in the area of housing and to the Ombudsman’s choice to keep its intervention active throughout the course of these cases until they have been dealt with conclusively.

Given the shared responsibility of many ministries (primarily the Ministries of Interior, Environment, Health and Social Solidarity) and the practical inertness of the relevant interministerial committee on Roma issues, it seems necessary to institute a special public body (a special secretariat or an independent institution, for instance) to undertake planning implementation at a national level, and above all, the necessary coordination of regional state services and Local Government Organizations within a context of clear and targeted local partnerships indicatively aiming at.

1. Creating conditions for permanent accommodation of Roma people in combination with altering the legal status of ownership and promoting the implementation of street plans;
2. Attaining a regulation so that Roma settlements are connected with the water and electricity supply and drainage networks as soon as the framework stipulated in Law 3304/2005 on positive action has been precised;
3. Providing infrastructure in settlements for wandering population groups;
4. Securing access for all Roma minors to education;
5. Continuously providing health care services as well as the relevant information on disease prevention and public health dangers;
6. Averting illegal and detrimental income-earning activities by offering alternative ways of securing sustenance;
7. Guaranteeing that before any violent eviction or removal by other means of Roma people from their settlements a specific relocation destination has been suggested with the appropriate infrastructure ensuring a decent living.

The GO shares the aforementioned suggestions with the National Commission for Human Rights within the framework of a special group aiming at the cooperation between public authorities and those agencies that have undertaken the responsibility for tackling with the problems and protecting the rights of Roma people and the representatives of the Roma organizations.

The GO supervises a constantly open pilot communication network with NGOs and other civil society institutions for the protection of Roma people. One of the main goals was to disseminate and draw information on vital problems faced by these population groups as well as to coordinate the activities undertaken by the participating agencies that are active in the field of protecting the rights and offering social support to Roma living in Greece.

On the 16th January 2013, the Greek Ombudsman, Ms. Calliope Spanou and the three Deputy Ombudsmen competent for issues relating to Roma, were invited in order to inform the members of the Special Permanent Committee on Equality, Youth and Human Rights, at the Committee’s session225. More specifically, the Greek Ombudsman’s addressing, for more than a decade, of Roma’s problems in Greece, has raised the necessity of government’s intervention. During the investigation of a large number of cases, the Ombudsman noted increasing phenomena of social polarization with disturbing impact on social peace and cohesion. The goal was to protect the rights of both Roma and those citizens whose rights are affected by the conditions prevailing in the surrounding areas. According to the Ombudsman, a more effective treatment of this complex issue requires coordinated efforts for their social integration and cooperation of competent authorities and bodies so as to ameliorate the quality of life for the inhabitants of those areas and limit conditions of immiiseration and social exclusion for a part of the population, thus curtailing and controlling phenomena that foster delinquency.

In its 2013 report on discrimination, the Greek Ombudsman noted that, in addition to the difficult housing problem, town planning authorities levied disproportionate fines on Roma for establishing makeshift homes without permits. In one case, the fine totaled five million euros ($6.75 million). The ombudsman considered the fines excessive in light of Roma poverty and social exclusion, and suggested authorities reduce the fines.

In addition, on 24 October 2013 the Greek Ombudsman called publicly for immediate measures for the protection of minors and Roma’s social integration.226 During that period of time, the case of the minor, who was removed by the police from a Roma couple at Pharsalos, has highlighted major administration weaknesses regarding the protection of minors as well as the protection from social exclusion and intolerance of whole population groups such as the Roma. Moreover, the independent authority stressed that the case’s great publicity, was accompanied by a series of rights’ violation of minors and adults. Violations associated from the one hand with the failure of the State to ensure respect of the minor’s rights and on the other hand, the reproduction, especially from certain media, of stereotypes and racist attitudes. At the same time, the Ombudsman points out that while the State is unable to ensure for minor and adult Roma equal enjoyment of their right to health, education, housing, work and social participation, police “sweeping operations” in Roma settlements across the country continue, escalate receive particularly high coverage. Therefore, the Ombudsman called for immediate measures for protecting effectively the rights of minors as well as implementing integrated interventions for Roma’s social inclusion.

As for the protection of minors the Ombudsman pointed out that:

- the protection of children, with a special focus on the vulnerable population groups, needs to become a priority of national policy, particularly during the current crisis and should be coordinated by public authorities.
- Childhood should be respected and protected also by the media: publication of minors’ photographs by the police in order to locate them or for other reasons relating to their protection, does not give a free pass to their extensive repetitive use.
- There is an absolute need to initiate the abolition of private adoptions which often conceal financial transactions and promote the trading of infants, while at the same time measures for accelerating public and transnational adoptions in line with the Hague Convention’s requirements should be taken.

Concerning Roma’s social exclusion, the Ombudsman highlighted that:

The various manifestations of Roma’s social exclusion constitute a reality which the state over the years has proven to be absolutely reluctant and inadequate to cope with effectively.

As the economic crisis affects primarily the most vulnerable groups, the state should take immediate measures for the Roma population in priority areas such as housing, welfare, education and vocational training, based on the positive measures arising under Article 4 of the Constitution and Law 3304/05 Article 6, as well as under the relevant recommendations of the European Union and International Organizations.

Social services should regularly visit Roma settlements and camps, with the aim to facilitate the protection of the rights of residents and especially children, as well as to prevent unlawful acts (violence, neglect, exploitation etc.).

Greek Roma’s peculiar “municipal registry related invisibility”, gaps in the existing institutional framework and margins for abuse had been identified as a major problem already since 2009 (Ombudsman’s Special Report). This situation undermines any attempt to design and implement solutions for integrating Greek Roma in the country’s social, economic and political life.

The state’s failure to give solutions to these longstanding problems makes it easier for illegal circuits of organized crime to involve or exploit members of this ethnic group, with significant cost for the entire society.

Any public authority or agency and its bodies, as well as those participating in the public discourse, media included, should actively and consistently contribute to combating stereotypes that fuel racism and intolerance.

The Greek Ombudsman in a special report, which was presented publicly on 25 September 2013, 227 pointed out that the great upsurge in racist violence, impunity for perpetrators and general neglect of the competent state authorities undermine social cohesion and the foundations of the rule of law. The report captures the phenomenon of racist violence from January 2012 to April 2013 and notes the rapid escalation of attacks in intensity and number throughout the whole year of 2013, especially after national elections. The Ombudsman highlights a looming inaction or unwillingness of the state and more particularly of police, to deal in a decisive manner with racist attacks, as well as to investigate with speed and transparency complaints against police officers. The occurrence of the phenomenon in school environment and its tackling by the school administration are also recorded and institutional tools provided by the relevant European experience and the current legal framework for countering racist violence are assessed. The report concludes with specific recommendations by the Ombudsman to the competent ministries toward the taking of immediate and effective measures.

According to the Ombudsman, the number and intensity of racist attacks and negligence in relation to the competent state authorities’ response, disrupt social cohesion and peace and undermine the value and foundations of the rule of law.

European network of legal experts in the non-discrimination field itself, but they also gravely discredit the country in the eyes of international public opinion, and therefore democracy cannot tolerate and society cannot get used to bigotry and racist crime.

The Ombudsman stresses that the complaints concerning 281 racist attacks from the 1st of January 2012 till the 30th of April 2013 that are included in this special report are just the tip of the iceberg, considering that the phenomenon has taken on explosive dimensions, especially after the 2012 elections. In those complaints 71 incidents are included in which the perpetrators seems to be associated with Golden Dawn and 47 incidents with alleged involvement of security forces’ members exercising their duties improperly.

In its report the independent authority asks from the competent authorities:

- to create a systematic, integrated way of recording incidents of racist violence and frequently make their findings public,
- to fully and swiftly investigate with transparency complaints against police officers for racist behaviour and participation in racist attacks,
- to ensure the sufficient staffing of the racist violence offices and to adopt special procedures for investigating complaints,
- to protect the victims and witnesses of racist attacks,
- to review the operation “Xenios Zeus” and examine the possible abuse of the principle of proportionality regarding the process of bringing individuals into police custody
- to take measures for systematically educating students in schools on matters of human rights and
- to establish a modern and functional legislation.

According to the Ombudsman, the elimination of discrimination that takes place in Greece on grounds of ethnicity, race, religion, sexual orientation or age (see the annual reports of the independent authority at its website and its sub-sites for issues of equal treatment, migration policy, Roma etc.), should be a priority because discrimination constitutes a violation of equal protection of human dignity under the Constitution and international rules of law.

B. The Committee for Equal Treatment has not yet examined any complaints from Roma and Travellers, and in any case it does not treat this group as a priority issue.
C. The Labour Inspectorate has not yet examined any complaints from Roma and Travellers, and in any case it does not treat this group as a priority issue.
8 IMPLEMENTATION ISSUES

8.1 Dissemination of information, dialogue with NGOs and between social partners

Describe briefly the action taken by the Member State

a) to disseminate information about legal protection against discrimination (Article 10 Directive 2000/43 and Article 12 Directive 2000/78)

The most important organ which provides information about legal protection against discrimination is the Ombudsman. It is an independent authority which provides legal aid, assistance and general advice to persons who consider that they have been victims of infringements of the law and discriminatory practices. The Labour Inspectorate also plays a distinctive role in dissemination of information.

In January 2012, the Greek Ombudsman issued a pamphlet aiming at informing vulnerable social groups and possible victims of discrimination on the Law 3304/2005 transposing EU Directives in the Greek legal order and on its competence to receive complaints concerning all grounds of discrimination regarding public sector. This initiative has been funded under the PROGRESS programme of the European Commission (2007 –2013), which has been created as a contribution in the achievement of EU primary goals in the field of employment as they had been defined in the Social Agenda that implemented the Lisbon Strategy. The pamphlet, which also exists in an electronic version published on the website of the Greek Ombudsman (see link below), describes the principal mission of this independent authority to mediate between the public administration and individuals, in order to help them to exercise their rights effectively. It also explains in detail how the Greek Ombudsman as the equality body competent for cases of discrimination in public sector promotes equal treatment and fight against discrimination based on all grounds (race or ethnicity, religious or other conviction, disability, age or sexual orientation). It also informs possible victims of discrimination on how they can in practice communicate with the Ombudsman’s Office, how complaints can be submitted, what each complaint should include and what stages the investigation of each case follows. The pamphlet has been distributed all over Greece in 75.000 copies throughout a popular free press newspaper.

In cooperation with the Ministry of Employment and other institutions, the General Secretariat for Youth organized in 2012: a) two intensive training seminars of two weeks on discrimination, focusing in particular on young delinquents, addressed to judges and correctional officers, b) 7 one-day seminars against discrimination due to ethnic or racial origin, religious or other beliefs, sexual orientation in employment addressed to employers, employers unions, chambers of commerce, professional associations and others (NGOs, journalists, and Local Authorities). However, the particular leaflet was written only in Greek language.

Moreover, the Ministry of Employment and Social Security addressed a Circular (3832/133/2.3.2012) to all Ministries, Regions, Local Administrations and Independent Authorities of the country requesting a) the cataloguing of all provisions violating the principle of equal treatment on the ground of age so as not to be implemented, and b) the cataloguing of all provisions concerning justified differential treatment because of age.

As protection against victimisation from a more general point of view, it is noteworthy that a Network for Recording Incidents of Racist Violence was set up in October 2011 at the initiative of the National Commission for Human Rights (NCHR), which is a statutory National Human Rights Institution having a consultative status with the Greek State, and the Office of the UN High Commission for Refugees in Greece (UNHCR). The initiative is supported by non-governmental organisations and bodies, such as Amnesty International, Aitima, “Babel” Day Centre, Doctors of the World, Ecumenical Refugee Programme, Greek Council for Refugees, Greek Forum of Refugees, Greek Helsinki Monitor, Group of Lawyers for the Rights of Refugees and Migrants, Hellenic League for Human Rights, METAdrasi, and PRAKSIS.

Two important findings resulted in the creation of the said network: a) the absence of a formal and effective racist violence incidents’ recording system, and b) the need to bring together all entities, which, on their own initiative, recorded racist incidents against individuals that resort to their services. On 1st October 2011 the Network for Recording Incidents of Racist Violence launched a pilot programme aimed at systematically recording racially motivated acts of violence. A common “Racist Incident Record Form” is used allowing thus to get a clear and complete view on the quantitative and qualitative trends of racist violence in Greece.

The Network has run on a pilot basis until 31 December 2011, and now its function is permanent since several NGOs are already participating under the common supervision of the National Commission for Human Rights and the UN Refugee Agency in Greece. It is still open to all organisations and bodies, which come into contact with victims of racist violence because of their legal, medical, social or other support services.

The extent of victimisation itself derives from the content of the analytical and substantiated work of the Network. For instance, during the period January-December 2013, the Racist Violence Recording Network documented233, through interviews with victims, 103 incidents occurred in Athens, especially in areas of its centre, like Agios Panteleimonas, Attiki, Attiki Square and other areas around Omonoia, while 8 more were recorded in the Attika region, apart from the Municipality of Athens. Furthermore, 15 incidents were recorded in Thessaloniki, 15 in Patra, 1 incident with 35 victims in Nea Manolada of Ileia, 5 in Piraeus, 5 in the region of Irakleio Crete, 4 in Chania, 2 in Mytilini, while there are recordings in: Rhodes, Lamia, Cos, Corfu, Kavala, Giannitsa, as well as within a ship sailing in Greek waters. The majority of the incidents took place in public places, while there is an increase of incidents which have occurred in places of detention (23 incidents within polices stations or detention centers). This finding, together with the increase of police racist violence incidents, cause particular concern. Remarkably, during the critical three months after the detaining of Golden Dawn leading members with the accusation of having set up a criminal organization (October – December 2013), the Racist Violence Recording Network has recorded 18 incidents of racist violence. This significant reduction in racist violence attacks compared to the previous 2013 period, not only does it bring a positive light, but it also comes in support of the Network’s data for the existence of raiding squads.

The majority of incidents concern personal attacks against foreigners, while the types of criminal acts are mainly “heavy physical injuries” (83 cases) and “simple physical injuries” (82 cases), mostly combined with threats, verbal abuse, damage to property and theft. Most cases occurred in the evening or early morning hours. There were also recorded 27 incidents of verbal violence (insults, threats).

It is also noted that the Racist Violence Recording Network recorded, after contacting the victim’s family and representatives of the Pakistani community, the murderous attack against 26-year Sachzat Loukman by two persons riding a motorcycle in Petralona in early 2013. In at least 20 recorded incidents, with 34 victims at least, the victims were targeted because of a racist motive mixed with other motives.

These so-called hate crimes with “mixed motive”, is a phenomenon that has been identified and analyzed in detail in the relevant international literature. The incidents of mixed motives recorded by the Network concern either racist attack emanating from and in conjunction with labour exploitation (with the most emblematic case being that of Nea Manolada) or exercise of racist violence followed by removal of assets (mobile phones, money and / or documents of residence permit). These incidents are typical racist crimes, because the victim is targeted and the offense is made possible precisely because of her “difference”. In these incidents the victim’s “difference” is not just the common but the key element. Victims who came into contact with members of the Network in the context of recording procedure were 176 men, 11 women, 1 transsexual man and 12 transsexual women. The average age of the victims is 29 years.

Only 33 of the 166 incidents have been reported to the police and criminal proceedings were initiated. The vast majority of victims do not want to take any further action, mainly because of fear associated with the lack of legal residence documents.: Unwillingness or discouragement were also mentioned, and in some cases, police authorities’ actual refusal to collaborate for submitting a complaint. Some victims also did not wish to proceed to making a complaint, because they have been victims of police violence in the past or because they knew that the perpetrators were acquainted with the police and / or Golden Dawn and feared that they would be targeted. The lack of victims’ trust in the justice system was also mentioned, having as a result many of the victims feeling it would be in vain to initiate a process because “it would lead nowhere”, “they would be unnecessary hassled without justice being served”.

According to the data that were communicated to the Network by the Greek Police, in 2013, by Departments and Agencies dealing with racist violence:

One hundred and nine (109) incidents with suspected racist motive, which have been investigated, were recorded nationwide by the competent Services of the Greek Police (Departments and Agencies Dealing with Racist Violence).

For ninety-three (93) incidents applications were filed and submitted to the local competent prosecution authorities. Of these forty-three (43) were referred under Law 927/1979.

The call center 11414 received 450 calls, of which 28 are under investigation.

In March 2012, UNHCR launched the campaign ‘1 victim of racist violence is too many’. UNHCR has setup a website on which it posts news regarding racist violence, events organized by itself and others, stories by victims, views of academics, journalists, writers on the subject, educational material for teachers etc. It has printed and distributed posters and leaflets. Its page on Facebook is regularly updated with material from the campaign’s platform.

On 25 April 2012, the Ministry of Justice, Transparency and Human Rights addressed a letter to the Prosecutor of Areios Pagos requesting the prosecuting authorities supervised by him to be on the alert for racist crimes and that such incidents need to be investigated in depth and the perpetrators prosecuted. It also requested the assistance of public prosecutors with the recording of racist crimes given that in recent years there has been a significant discrepancy between the number of incidents reported by the official Greek authorities and the data provided by international and state institutions dealing with this issue, such as UNHCR and the Greek National Commission for Human Rights.235

In September 2012, the Civil Supreme Court (“Areios Pagos”) communicated a request for the lifting of parliamentary immunity of three “Golden Dawn” parliamentarians to Parliament in order to prosecute for falsification of authority and destruction of foreign property after their participation in the destruction of counters of street vendors owned by foreigners in open air fun-fares and fruit markets and conducted proper documentation checks on such owners.236 Parliament voted in favour of lifting parliamentary immunity.237 As a result, on 18 September 2012, the Prosecutor of “Areios Pagos” issued a circular addressed to the Prosecutors of Appeals Courts stating that parliamentarians may be arrested without having to wait for the lifting of their immunity. Even in cases of misdemeanor, physical constraint of the aggressor MP is permitted, with the use of preventive means applied to ordinary citizens by law enforcement agents, who are responsible for preventing the disturbance of public order and crimes.238

On 11 December 2012, Presidential Decree 132/2012 under the title “Establishment of Departments and Bureaus for Combating Racist Violence” was issued (OG A 239).

The PD provides for the establishment of 2 Departments against Racist Violence in the Sub-Directorates of State Security in Athens and Thessaloniki, and Bureaus against Racist Violence in all Security Sub-Directorates and Departments of the country.

On 28 September 2013 Greek police arrested the leader, several MPs and dozens of members of ultra-right Golden Dawn neo-Nazi party on charges of leading a “criminal organization” (article 187 of the Greek Penal Code), participation in murders, attempts of murders and physical inquiries against Greeks and foreigners, illegal possession of weapons and financial blackmails. According to human rights organisations, the leaders of this party are responsible for hundreds of attacks on dark-skinned immigrants in the three years since the debt-stricken country plunged into crisis. In particular, Greek police issued arrest warrants for Golden Dawn leader Nikos Michaloliakos, party spokesman and MP Ilias Kasidiaris, two other prominent members, five other party MPs, as well as a number of ordinary party members. Two police officials related with Golden Dawn were also arrested. Police have detained about 30 members of the ultra-right party, which won 18 seats in the Greek parliament in the June 2012 elections, having received close to 7 percent of the popular vote. Ranked as Greece's third most popular party, Golden Dawn is under investigation mainly for the murder of rapper Pavlos Fissas, who bled to death after being stabbed twice by a party sympathizer in September 2013.

The fatal stabbing of Pavlos Fyssas, a hip hop star popular among anti-fascists on 17 September 2013, prompted widespread outrage and finally galvanised the governing coalition into taking action. After revelations that Golden Dawn had set up hit squads with the help of commandos in the special forces and openly colluded with the police, authorities launched a far-reaching inquiry into the group's activities after a public prosecutor’s decision to investigate all the cases regarding the acts of Golden Dawn. On 19 September 2013, the Minister of Public Order assembled 32 case briefs and submitted them to the Supreme Court Prosecutor with the request to examine the possibility to join them in one criminal file on felony charges of creation and operation of an organized criminal organization. In the on-going special criminal investigation that followed, through mid-January 2014, more than two scores of Golden Dawn members are suspects or indicted with the party’s leader and five other MPs (out of a total of 18 MPs) remanded in custody.

However, it should be pointed out that for almost all 32 cases, criminal files existed in various prosecutor offices. Yet, the prosecutor authorities did not take the initiative to join them. Moreover, in several cases, the investigation before September 2013 did not include a search for racist motivation and/or relation to an organized organization.

On 29 September 2013 the detainees were taken under high security to the prosecutors’ office and charged officially on evidence linking the party to a string of attacks, including the stabbing of the rapper on September 17 and the killing of an immigrant earlier this year.

As for discrimination in the media, the Code of Conduct of the Athens Journalists’ Association contains provisions (articles 1 and 2), which require journalists to impart information without any prejudice related to their own political, social, religious, racial or cultural views or beliefs and to make no distinction on grounds of national origin, sex, race, religion, political beliefs, economic and social status. Furthermore, article 4 of Presidential Decree 77/2003 regulating radio and television news and political broadcasts prohibits the presentation of individuals in a way that, under specific conditions, could encourage their ridicule, social isolation or discrimination on grounds of racial or ethnic origin, nationality, religion and language, among others. It also prohibits broadcasting racist and xenophobic and intolerant views, in particular concerning ethnic or religious minorities and other vulnerable population groups. Presidential Decree 109/2010 transposing the Audiovisual Media Services Directive provides under article 7 that audio-visual service providers must ensure that programmes do not cause hate due to race, sex, religion, beliefs, nationality, disability, age and sexual orientation, and they must also not take advantage of people’s superstitions and prejudices.

On 28 November 2013, the Greek Minister of Justice, submitted a bill that amends the current anti-racist legislation (Law 927/1979) and foresees tough penalties for racist behaviours and crimes, to the Greek Parliament. This anti-racist bill is a combination of proposals submitted by different parties. It is has been submitted to the Plenary of the Parliament for final approval. In a short statement from the Ministry of Justice the Minister stressed that the aim of the bill is to combat racism and xenophobia and to promote the harmonization of the Greek legislation within the frame of the Framework Decision 2008/913 of the Council of Europe of 28th November 2008, on combating certain forms and expressions of racism and xenophobia by means of criminal law.

According to the bill, racist attacks will be sentenced for up to three years imprisonment and financial penalties of up to 20,000 Euros. The above sanctions will be imposed on anyone who:

- seeks, through his words or actions, to provoke discrimination, hatred or violence against individuals or groups on the basis of their racial or ethnic origin, religion or sexual orientation, or

240 Media Deontology.
European network of legal experts in the non-discrimination field

- participates in organizations seeking to provoke any form of racial discrimination, or
- insults individuals or groups on the basis of race or ethnic origin, or
- engages in discrimination in providing goods and services on the basis of racial or ethnic origin, religion or sexual orientation only if the behaviour of the perpetrator presupposes a racist/discriminatory motive/intention to provoke hatred or violence against individuals or groups.

However, the bill has not become a law yet, due to different approaches among ruling parties in this issue.

b) to encourage dialogue with NGOs with a view to promoting the principle of equal treatment (Article 12 Directive 2000/43 and Article 14 Directive 2000/78) and Article 18 of Law 3304/2005 entrusts the Economic and Social Committee with, inter alia, encouraging dialogue with NGOs and representative unions which have a legitimate interest in combating discrimination on the grounds of ethnic or racial origin, religion or beliefs, sexual orientation and disability. Nevertheless, there is no example of any such initiative on the part of the Economic and Social Committee.

On January 2010 the National Commission of Human Rights, advisory body of the Greek government, issued a non binding consultative opinion with specific proposals for the improvement of the legal framework concerning discrimination in Greece. The NCHR expressed the opinion that legal amendments in the Law 3304/2005 are necessary. The Commission stressed that its initial comments on the draft law 3304/2005 had not been adopted by Parliament and expanded on these previous comments. In terms of substantive content of the law, the Commission proposed that the prohibition of discrimination on “multiple grounds” as such should be made explicitly unlawful. In addition, the Commission voiced its concerns due to differential treatment based on nationality. Greek legislation frequently allows the different treatment of aliens, with the exception of nationals of EU countries.

The Commission considered that such differential treatment, which however may dissimulate one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination should also be made unlawful. In terms of procedure, the Commission stressed that the procedural rules of Directives 2000/78 and 2000/43 regarding the reversal of burden of proof have not been integrated in the Code of Civil Procedure. The national transposition law however explicitly mentions the reversal of the burden of proof and is applicable without a revision of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Constitution, Article 82(3): ‘Matters relating to the establishment, operation and competences of the Economic and Social Committee, the mission of which is the conduct of social dialogue for the overall policy of the Country and especially for the orientations of the economic and social policy, as well as the formulation of opinions on Bills and law proposals referred to it, shall be specified by law.’ The law in force is Law 2232/1994. (It was enacted prior to the 2001 Constitutional Revision, but the new Constitution recognised and upgraded the Committee’s competences.)

The Commission also criticised the law for excessively limiting the number of legal entities that may bring a discrimination lawsuit to court. Importantly, the Commission proposed that the Ombudsman should be allowed by Law 3304/2005 to intervene in favour of the plaintiff in cases involving allegations of discrimination, which have been investigated by the Ombudsman and are subsequently heard by the courts. Finally, in terms of monitoring, the Commission proposed that a single equality body should monitor the implementation of Law 3304/2005 with regards to the provisions of Directive 2000/43. This should be the Ombudsman for all cases except discrimination in the provision of goods and services, which should fall under the scope of the Consumer Ombudsman.

In 2011, four civil society institutions established the Observatory on the Combating of Discrimination. The Observatory was established in order to develop a methodological framework for the evaluation and assessment of indicators and policies on discrimination in Greece, compared with other EU countries. Specifically, the purpose of the project was, firstly, to exploit the available data, so as to produce an image on discrimination of vulnerable groups and to propose the collection of more reliable data, wherever it is found lacking. The overall objective of the project was the elimination of discrimination and exclusion, to promote cohesion, to showcase good practices and design concrete action to combat discrimination. The programme was EU funded and ended in 2013. It was carried out through the cooperation of four institutions: the National Centre for Social Research, the Economic and Social Council of Greece, the Vocational Training Centre of INE/GSEE, EFXINI POLI (Local Authorities Network for Social, Cultural, Tourist, Environmental and Agricultural Development. The establishment of the Observatory was a very important step for the monitoring and assessment of discrimination based on all grounds in the employment sector and it produced cohesive reports that documented all forms of discrimination as well as the most vulnerable groups.

c) to promote dialogue between social partners to give effect to the principle of equal treatment within workplace practices, codes of practice, workforce monitoring (Article 11 Directive 2000/43 and Article 13 Directive 2000/78)

Article 18 of Law 3304/2005 entrusts the Economic and Social Committee with, inter alia, encouraging dialogue with the social partners, which are also, among others, members of this Committee.

Since working with stakeholders on the issues of discrimination is one of its priorities, the Greek Ombusman has established in December 2013 an open communication anti-discrimination network, consisting of civil society organisations. It is actually an effort for an unofficial partnership between the various stakeholders in order to share information, knowledge and collectively work for the promotion of equality and, overall support, for these groups of the population. Following the success of the pilot communication and coordination specific smaller networks which were set up in the past with regional civil society organisations active in the field of Roma and immigrant protection and support, the Greek Ombudsman used its very positive experience by establishing in 2013 similar networks for each ground of discrimination and by unifying them under the umbrella of a common multi-thematic network. This network aim to lead to greater awareness of the role the Ombudsman can play in safeguarding equal treatment and also familiarise participating bodies and organisations with the existing institutional tools and legislation for combating discrimination.

The Ombudsman launched this network in order to establish a regular contact with those groups of the population who suffer systematically from discriminatory actions and exclusion. The initiative aims at encouraging the mediation by these bodies between the targeted population group and the Greek Ombudsman, the dissemination of critical information related to institutional tools and know-how and the gathering of information on the crucial problems faced by these groups; but, above all, the main objective has been the joint coordination of action of the participating bodies. Both the aforementioned initiatives have proved successful and the Ombudsman intends to establish such networks on the grounds of sexual orientation and disability in the coming year, using the experience gained by the establishment of the previous two.

d) to specifically address the situation of Roma and Travellers. Is there any specific body or organ appointed on the national level to address Roma issues?

Law 2667/1998 entrusts the National Commission for Human Rights with encouraging dialogue about human rights with NGOs, representatives of government ministries, representative unions and among others, with the Roma community, which also has a seat on the Commission.

247 Constitution, Article 82(3): ‘Matters relating to the establishment, operation and competences of the Economic and Social Committee, the mission of which is the conduct of social dialogue for the overall policy of the Country and especially for the orientations of the economic and social policy, as well as the formulation of opinions on Bills and law proposals referred to it, shall be specified by law.’ The law in force is Law 2232/1994. (It was enacted prior to the 2001 Constitutional Revision, but the new Constitution recognised and upgraded the Committee’s competences.)
Since 2006 the Greek Ombudsman participates in the National Working Group of the Project “For Diversity / against discrimination”, an initiative initiated by the General Directorate of Employment and Equal Opportunities of the European Commission. The project aims at the coordination of actions of national equality bodies and at the encouragement of organisations representing vulnerable groups to activate themselves in the field of reception of information concerning legal developments and good practices. It also aims at the sensibilisation of the private and public sector so that stakeholders of civil society could combat more easily all possible phenomena of unequal treatment.

In 2012 the Greek Ombudsman issued a Guide for the Municipal Authorities regarding the social integration of the Roma which has been designed in order to summarize the views of the Ombudsman and to answer potential questions from local authority employees vis-à-vis marginalized Roma groups. The title of the Guide is “There are travellers and socially excluded Gypsies/Roma in our Municipality: what can we do?” and it contains 12 recommendations concerning: a) the need to record the actual situation in the field (whether they are Greeks on not and where they come from); b) provision of immediate assistance to travellers to prevent public health issues; c) make sure that all children attend schooling; d) draft plans for the housing, professional, and educational integration of Roma in local communities; e) set up organized facilities for temporary stay; f) register Greek Roma in the municipal records; g) combat stereotypes and contribute to the creation of role models, e.g by giving awards to good students; h) provide opportunities for vocational training.

a) Are there mechanisms to ensure that contracts, collective agreements, internal rules of undertakings and the rules governing independent occupations, professions, workers’ associations or employers’ associations do not conflict with the principle of equal treatment? These may include general principles of the national system, such as, for example, "lex specialis derogat legi generali (special rules prevail over general rules) and lex posteriori derogat legi priori (more recent rules prevail over less recent rules).

According to Article 26 of Law 3304/2005, the anti-discrimination law, the special rules of this law prevail over general or conflicting rules. According to Article 18 of Law 3304/2005 the Economic and Social Committee is entrusted to (a) draft an annual report on the developments with regard to the application of the principle of equal treatment and (b) make suggestions to the Government and to social partners on promoting equal treatment and non-discrimination.

b) Are any laws, regulations or rules that are contrary to the principle of equality still in force?

The Code of Lawyers (Legislative Decree 3026/1954) provides that only Greek nationals can exercise the profession of lawyer (direct discrimination on the basis of nationality). It also provides that only Greek-speaking lawyers up to a maximum of 35 years of age can become members of the Lawyers Associations. The question of whether the above provision is in conformity with anti-discrimination has been raised in the Committee for Equal Treatment but the latter – due to its problematic function - could not provide the answer within the time limit of the current Update.

With the Circular No 15 of the Ministry of National Defense (12 April 2010) the condition of “Greek ethnic origin” has been erased from the qualifications required for the admission of students in Greek military academies. This requirement was never included in a legal provision but it used to be repeated in every annual proclamation that defined the criteria of selection of candidate students.

There have been no developments in the field of compliance during 2013.

9 CO-ORDINATION AT NATIONAL LEVEL

Which government department/ other authority is/ are responsible for dealing with or co-ordinating issues regarding anti-discrimination on the grounds covered by this report?

The Greek Ombudsman is competent to conduct research and publicize special reports on the enforcement of the principle of equal treatment on the grounds covered by this report (article 20, par. 3 of the Law 3304/2005), whereas the Economic and Social Committee (OKE), a consultative body aiming to promote social dialogue especially between employers and employees, is competent to conduct social discourse on anti-discrimination issues, encourage contacts with NGOs and civil society in general and write annual reports with proposals for the improvement of the legal framework (article 18 of the Law 3304/2005).

Is there an anti-racism or anti-discrimination National Action Plan? If yes, please describe it briefly.

There is no anti-racism or anti-discrimination National Action Plan (see below at the next paragraph a development concerning a general National Action Plan on Human Rights. However, it is to be noted that the Economic and Social Committee of Greece (OKE), which is an advisory body based on the tripartite organisation model, within the framework of its mandate to conduct social dialogue on social policy issues, draws up an annual report on developments regarding the implementation of Law 3304/2005, with special emphasis to the workplace, submits proposals to the Government and social partners on the promotion of the principle of equal treatment and the adoption of anti-discriminatory measures, encourages dialogue with representative organisations, including relevant NGOs, and aims at raising awareness and disseminating information on the applicable legislation and the measures taken in pursuance thereof.

In December 2013, the General Secretariat of Transparency and Human Rights of the Ministry of Justice presented the National Action Plan on Human Rights prepared with the assistance of experts from all relevant ministries and agencies. The Action Plan specifies the binding framework of priorities and actions of each Ministry and provides opportunities for comments, improvements and criticism for everyone, in order to be continually improved and meets the requirements of international organizations. With the preparation of the National Action Plan for Human Rights, Greece presents a specific schedule of activities and initiatives for the protection of Human Rights, relevant Government officials have undertaken more specific commitments and priorities for the implementation of the programme; and citizens are able to have a full picture of the action-plans carried or to be carried out, the actions and omissions they can review and to express their opinions and suggestions.

for improvement. The National Action Plan includes a list of pending policies for the combating of racial discrimination: \(^{253}\) the revision of the institutional framework for awarding citizenship; simplifying the legislative framework for immigration; drafting a new National Plan Integration of Immigrants; action for the proper functioning of the Departments and Office of Racial Violence; systematic recording and processing of racial violence; update and issue circular orders to deal with racist incidents; create channels of cooperation between the Greek Police and other agencies and special education programmes for the staff in management practices of racial phenomena; and organising educational seminars for judges and prosecutors. However, the provisions of this general National Action Plan have been criticised as abstract.

A. Case-Law of penal courts

Name of the court: Kefallonia First Instance Prosecutor
Date of decision: 03 June 2008 and 18 July 2008
Name of the parties: Greek Helsinki Monitor v. State Agents in Kefallonia
Address of the webpage: Not available
Brief summary: When the Greek Helsinki Monitor (GHM), a Greek NGO, invoked Law 3304/2005 (provision on discrimination in housing) before the prosecutor in Kefallonia to challenge Roma evictions, the prosecutor rejected representation by GHM of the Roma victim invoked on the basis of that law. The Appeal Prosecutor of Patras ruled that the specific judicial appeal had been submitted after the deadline defined by law and therefore it rejected the request for procedural reasons without examination of the substance of the case.

Name of the court: First Five-Member Athens’ Court of Appeals
Date of decision: 27 March 2009
Name of the parties: Greece vs Costas Plevris
Reference number: 913/27.3.2009

The First Instance Court of Athens in its December 2007 ruling convicted the author, who denies the Holocaust and promotes the Nazi ideology in his writings, of inciting racial hatred through his book and sentenced him to 14-month suspended imprisonment (Penal Law 927/1979). The author filed an appeal and the Appeals Court found him not guilty on 27 March 2009 (the judgment and minutes have not been written yet). On 1st July 2009 the Prosecutor of the Court of Cassation appealed on issues of law (“anairesi”) the Court of Appeals’ decision. The Prosecutor argued, among others, that the Court of Appeals interpreted wrongly the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the relevant Greek law 927/1979. With this decision (913/27.3.2009) the Court did not accept the Prosecutor’s arguments.

Name of the court: Third Three-Member Misdemeanors Court of Athens
Date of decision: 7 January 2009
Name of the parties: GHM vs newspaper “Alpha Ena”
Reference number: 185/2009
Brief summary: The former editor and the current editor of the weekly newspaper “Alpha Ena” of the extreme right-wing party LAOS were tried for the dissemination of false information (Art. 191 & 1a of the Criminal Code) and the expression of insulting ideas through the press against a group of people on the grounds of their ethnic origin (Art. 2 of anti-racist Law 927/79) in an anti-Semitic article published in 28 July 2007. The trial was initiated by the Greek Helsinki Monitor (GHM). According to the complaint, the article uses anti-Semitic stereotypes, raises incitement to racial hatred against the Jews and presents them as organising vicious plans against other people; in this way, it insults their personality and dignity due to their ethnic origin. With its Judgment 185/2009, on 7 January 2009, the Third Three-Member Misdemeanors Court of Athens acquitted the defendants of a violation of Article 2 od Law 927/79. GHM formally asked the Head of the Athens First Instance Prosecutor’s Office to file an appeal against the acquittal, but the request (registered with protocol number 2049/13-1-09) was rejected. It must be noted that GHM’s Andrea Gilbert was confirmed as civil claimant in that trial. It was the third time that a Three-Member Misdemeanors Court of Athens confirmed civil claimants in trials with the anti-racism law. GHM is now considering filing an application on behalf of Andrea Gilbert to the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) or the UN Human Rights Committee (UN HRC).

Name of the court: Third Three-Member Misdemeanors Court of Athens
Date of decision: 29 January 2010
Name of the parties: Greek State vs Ioannis Haralambopoulos (editor of magazine “Apollonio Fos”)
Reference number: Number 8806/2010
Brief summary: On 29 January 2010 the Third Three-Member Misdemeanors Court of Athens, in its decision with the number 8806/2010, convicted the publisher of the magazine “Apollonio Fos” Ioannis Haralambopoulos. The latter was found guilty of having violated Article 2 (under the title “interdiction of racial discrimination”) of the anti-racism Law 927/1979, since in 2007 he had distributed in public anti-Semitic pamphlets that among others were justifying all persecutions of Jews in history, in an attempt to express his moral and political support for Constantine Plevris, who was being prosecuted at that time for his famous anti-Semitic book “Jews, the whole truth”. Moreover, the specific pamphlets cited that all Jews in the world (including Greek Jews) are to blame collectively for the acts of the State of Israel, whereas it clearly referred to Jews as enemies of the Greek nation. Ioannis Haralambopoulos was sentenced to seven months imprisonment with a three years suspension, and the sentence was suspended until the trial of a possible appeal.

Name of the court: Greek Supreme Court’ s Criminal Section (“Areios Pagos”)
Date of decision: 15 April 2010
Name of the parties: Greek State vs Kostas Plevris Reference number: Judgment 3 /2010
Address of the webpage:
Brief summary: The Greek Supreme Court’s Criminal Section, sitting in plenary, dismissed the appeal in cassation “in the interests of law”, filed by the Prosecutor of the Supreme Court against judgment 913/2009 of the Five Members Appeals Court of Athens. With the above judgment self-professed neo-Nazi writer Costas Plevris had been acquitted of charges of violation of anti-racist law 927/1979 with his book “The Jews: the whole truth”. In specific, the Court decided that Mr. Plevris does not offend the human value of Jewish persons (due to their ethnic or racial origin) because he is attacking “Zionist Jews” and not Jews in general. Therefore, “Zionist Jews” do not constitute a group that is related with ethnic or racial origin and they do not fall within the scope of a relevant legal protection. Moreover, the Court stated that his criticism has a scientific character and that the writer “did not have the intention to urge the readers to proceed in acts that could possibly result in discrimination, hatred or violence against Jewish”. However, according to the minority opinion of the Court, Mr. Plevris’ criticism is offensive and racist and it refers to all Jews since the distinction between Jews and Zionists has been used as a pretext.

Name of the court: 3rd Three-Member Appeals Court of Athens
Date of decision: 31 October 2011
Name of the parties: Andrea Gilbert vs Costas Plevris Reference number: 9685/2011 decision

Brief summary: The 3rd Three-Member Appeals Court of Athens, with its decision 9685/2011, convicted attorney Kostas Plevris for homophobic speech against the civil plaintiff Andrea Gilbert, spokesperson for “Athens Pride” and an officer of Greek Helsinki Monitor. The above speech concerned a case where, on 16 July 2008, as the defendant in another lawsuit, Kostas Plevris had served an extrajudicial “declaration to the Misdemeanors Prosecutor of Athens”, stating that Andrea Gilbert was “an antisocial element [who] boasts of representing homosexual women, meaning that she is a psychologically defective, sexually perverted person who, as she does not respect her female nature, does not respect the truth either”. Although the defendant sought to rely on the freedom of expression, the court convicted Kostas Plevris to six (6) months imprisonment with a three-year suspension, while the prosecutor had recommended seven (7) months. The prosecutor highlighted that homosexuals should be treated as equal citizens and therefore the negative terms that had been used by the defendant (“irregular” / “anomalous” persons) could be regarded as offensive falling within the scope of the penal crime of “libel / slander”. He also mentioned the Law 3304/2005 that transposed the EU Directives against discrimination and he referred to the decision 3490/2006 of the Council of State (Supreme Administrative Court of Greece) saying that erotic relations between persons of the same sex are “an existing social reality” and consequently their choices should be respected. The court adopted the arguments of the prosecutor and the civil plaintiffs.

B. Case – Law of civil courts

Name of the court: Court of First Instance of Rhodes
Date of decision: 30 April 2009
Name of the parties: Prosecutor of Rhodes G. Oikonomou vs Evaggelia Vlami, A. Aliferis (Mayor of Tilos island) and Ol. K
Reference number: 114/30.4.2009
Address of the webpage: http://elawyer.blogspot.com/2009/05/blog-post_10.html
Brief summary: The Court of First Instance of Rhodes annulled in April 2009 the first same-sex (civil) marriage in Greece conducted in June 2008 in the island of Tilos. The Court of Rhodes held that the Civil Code includes no provisions for same-sex marriages. Moreover, the Court held that neither article 12 of the ECHR, nor article 23 of the ICCPR guarantee such a right. The Court, which has jurisdiction over all the Dodecanese islands, issued its ruling in response to an appeal lodged by a local prosecutor against the two couples, two men and two women, and against the Mayor of Tilos. According to the Court, the national legislation, however, does not permit the marriage of same-sex couples, as the difference of sex is regarding as a necessary precondition for the existence of marriage, as is comprehended by the Greek legislator. In addition, the will of the legislator for the treatment of such situation was recently expressed in Law 3719/2008 on “legal cohabitation”, which explicitly states in Art. 1 that it concerns only heterosexual couples. The Court rejected the argument that a possible prohibition of same-sex marriages would constitute a violation of the principle of equal treatment. The prosecutor had asked for both unions to be declared null and void. The two couples have already appealed before the Court of Appeal and the European Court of Human Rights.

Name of the court: Appeal Court of Dodecanese
Name of the parties: Evaggelia Vlami, A. Aliferis (Mayor of Tilos island) and Ol. K vs Prosecutor of Rhodes G. Oikonomou
Reference number: 83/14.4.2011
Address of the webpage: Not available
Brief summary: The Appeal Court of Dodecanese, which has jurisdiction over all the Dodecanese islands, unanimously upheld the initial decisions of the Court of First Instance of Rhodes that had annulled in April 2009 the first same-sex (civil) marriage.

This decision constitutes a landmark first ever conviction for homophobia in Greece. However, it should be pointed out that there is no special penal crime concerning homophobic speech, because Law 927/79 (interdiction of racial discrimination) as amended by Law 1419/84 (sanctions against racial & religious discrimination) does not include discrimination based on sexual orientation as a ground for imposition of penal sanctions. This explains why the defendant was convicted for the “general” crime of “libel / slander”, which protects the “honour” and the “reputation” of a person (Article 361 of the Greek Penal Code).
in Greece (conducted in June 2008 on the island of Tilos). The Appeal Court held that the Civil Code did not provide provisions for same-sex marriages. Moreover, the Court held that neither Article 12 of the ECHR, nor Article 23 of the ICCPR guarantee such a right. According to the Appeal Court, the national legislation does not permit the marriage of same-sex couples, as the difference of sex is regarded as a necessary precondition for the existence of marriage. The Court rejected the argument that a possible prohibition of same-sex marriages would constitute a violation of the principle of equal treatment. The prosecutor asked for both unions to be declared null and void. For unknown technical reasons, the part of the case concerning the second union was officially issued a few months later containing the same legal argumentation.

C. Case-Law of labour courts

Name of the court: Athens Court of First Instance
Date of decision: 04 December 2008
Name of the parties: X v. Bank Y
Reference number: 2048/2008
Address of the webpage: http://lawdb.intrasoftnet.com
Brief summary: The applicant, a bank officer and person with disabilities, contested her transfer to another branch of the bank, far from her house. The Court investigated if there were other employees with the same qualifications available to work in that branch of the bank. When the Court verified this, it concluded that the transfer of the applicant was excessive in terms of Law 3304/2005 (direct discrimination). It did not consider the issue of reasonable accommodation as an independent legal provision but it has merged it into the notion of direct discrimination.

D. Equality bodies decisions

a. An opinion of the Ombudsman on the non-recognition of same-sex couples in comparison with the EU law

In response to a citizens’ complaint regarding the potential violation by Greece of the European legislation that prohibits discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation, through the provisions of the Law 3719/2008 that foresees legal cohabitation only for heterosexual couples, the Ombudsman replied that the Directive 2000/78/EC prohibits discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation only in the field of employment and occupation and not with regard to family situation, which remains a competence of the national legislator. Therefore, the provisions of the said law do not violate in principle the aforementioned Directive.

In detail, the Ombudsman held that the non-recognition of same-sex couples by the Greek law does not violate the European legislation, despite the fact that Directive 2004/38/EC cannot be applied to de facto partners of Greek citizens when residing in another EU Member State. The Ombudsman reasoned that the application of the European legislation is dependent on the prior recognition, according to the national legislation of the Member State of origin, of a right that follows the beneficiary in case of his/her residence in another EU Member State (case 20914/2008).

b. The characterization of an illiterate Roma citizen as incapable of signing his ID card is considered unlawful

After the intervention of the Greek Ombudsman, a Roma citizen was awarded a national identification card signed by him, in replacement of the previous one which stated “incapable to sign”. In detail, the citizen appealed to the Ombudsman after the denial of the police department to allow him to sign the identification card, if he did not submit a state proof of education; in case he failed to provide the required proof the ID card would state “incapable to sign”.

During the relevant investigation of the Ombudsman, the police authorities declared that this proof of education is requested from all citizens in order to have their ID cards replaced; the Ombudsman argued that this practice is not based in law and if the police deems necessary to continue it, then the incapability to sign should be stated in cases where the citizens declare that they are incapable to sign and should not be linked to their education level. The police finally accepted to replace the ID card and allow the Roma citizen to sign. However, this was a single case, and it does not happen in general with Roma. Since the police authorities falsely argued that this practice is requested from all citizens, there is strong evidence that it is linked to ethnic/racial discrimination. The reason why the Ombudsman did not focus on this dimension is because it generally shares the view that most of the areas of administrative activity pertain to the authoritative rather than the public service jurisdiction of the State, and therefore they do not fall within the scope of Directives.

There are no trends, patterns of figures concerning Roma cases in relation with the implementation of Directives. In general, as it is stressed in its Annual Report 2008 (the latest published on line), the Greek Ombudsman emphasises on the fact that “what remains unabatedly alarming is the ongoing discrimination practice against citizens of Roma origin. The problem boils down to the deliberate marginalization of the issues raised by this situation which calls for a concerted official initiative in order to appease the angered reactions of local residents”. The serious problems of subsisting in intolerable living conditions in conjunction with the various forms of exclusion experienced by a large number of Greek Roma on a daily basis in regards to their participation in the social, economic and political aspects of social life have been made reference to in all its Annual Reports on Equal Treatment. The experience gained from its investigation of cases demonstrates that the perplexed attitude of administration and the reluctance to take immediate effective measures to a long standing social problem not only perpetuates this problem but it also nourishes the tension and the social opposition amongst the Roma who live in makeshift settlements and the citizens who reside adjacent to these camps. As a result, the systematic inaction from the part of state officials to solve the chronic problem instead of creating a climate of compassionate understanding of the plight of Roma people to their neighbors and an interest to assist them in improving their living conditions, are causing their frustration, driving them to persistently demand the relocation of the Roma settlers, as a way of evading the problems they encounter. Even when things appear to have reached a critical point, the central and regional administration officials appear hesitant to adopt drastic or to decisively coordinate the actions to be assumed by each of the public agencies involved. Local government frequently transfers the blame for its inaction to the central administration, on the grounds that the problem needs to be holistically and centrally confronted, thus absolving itself of any shared responsibility or competence.

To this perplexing stand of the central and local public administration should be added the ambivalent attitude of the police authorities which also seem to be reluctant to effectively control the delinquent behaviour displayed by some members of the Roma community, thus accentuating the general feeling of insecurity and tension.

E. Case-law of Council of State (Supreme Administrative Court of Greece)

Name of the court: Council of State
Date of decision: 9 May 2012
Name of the parties: Citizen vs Article 6 of Law 2318/1995 (names of citizens non disposed by Council of State)
Reference number: number of decision 1624 /2012
Brief summary: In 2003 a woman was denied access to the profession of bailiff because she had already turned 35 of age at that time. She initiated judicial proceedings before the administrative courts but the final decision was issued with a delay of nine years. On 9 May 2012 the Greek Council of State (supreme administrative court in Greece) finally declared as unconstitutional the legal provisions establishing age limits for the access to a profession if they are not justified by the reason of necessity. In particular, the Court invalidated the provision of Article 6 of Law 2318/1995, according to which only persons under the age of 35 years were allowed to participate in examinations regarding access to the profession of bailiff. The Court ruled that age limits are not “proportionally related” with the “legislator’s purpose”, which consists in the need of justice to be served by persons with adequate scientific knowledge and experience and moral integrity. In particular, the fact that a candidate bailiff has turned 35 of age cannot lead to the conclusion that his/her intellectual capacity has been reduced, if common experience and general conditions of the profession are taken into consideration. As a result, the Court decided that the constitutional principles of proportionality, professional freedom and participation in economic and social life were violated. The above principles, interpreted by the Court, are enshrined in the Articles 5 and 25 of the Greek Constitution.

There are no trends and patterns in cases brought by Roma and Travellers concerning the two anti-discrimination Directives.

However, in its 105th session, the UN Human Rights Committee found that in case “Katsaris vs Greece”, Greece violated Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (I.C.C.P.R), according to which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the Article 26 of the I.C.C.P.R., according to which effective and equal protection against any discrimination on any ground should be guaranteed. In that case, during the time he was in detention, Mr. Katsaris was subjected to racially motivated insults and verbal abuse by the police officers, whereas later a prosecutor used discriminatory language referring to his Romani life-style.259

F. Case law of European Court of Human Rights

Name of the court: European Court of Human Rights
Date of decision: 11 December 2012
Name of the parties: Sampani and Others v Greece
Reference number: Application no. 59608/09
Address of the webpage: http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng/Pages/search.aspx#{%22itemid%22:%22001-115169%22

Brief summary: The applicants were 140 Greek nationals from 38 families, all of Roma origin, who were living at the material time on the Psari authorized residential site near Aspropyrgos. Some 98 of applicants were children aged from five and a half to 15, and 42 were their parents or guardians. Some of them were applicants in the case which gave rise to the judgment in the first ECHR decision “Sampanis and Others v. Greece”. This new case concerns again these children’s schooling. The Court observed that although the 9th, 10th and 12th schools of Psari shared the same catchment area, only Roma pupils had attended the 12th school. According to the Court it was apparent that there had been no significant changes to the situation that had given rise to the first Sampanis and Others judgment. During the period to which the present case related (2008-2010), the 12th school had continued to be attended exclusively by Roma pupils, despite the education authorities’ intentions. Accordingly, while the school had been set up to integrate the Roma pupils of Psari into the ordinary education system, its operational problems had meant that they continued to suffer a difference in treatment, and there was therefore evidence of a practice of discrimination under Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights in conjunction with Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, since the Court, while also noting that the Greek Government had not given any convincing explanation of why no non-Roma pupils attended the 12th school, found that the operation of the school between 2008 and 2010 had resulted in further discrimination against the applicants. It is noteworthy that the Court held that in exercising its margin of appreciation in the education sphere, Greece had not taken into account the particular needs of Roma children in Psari as members of a disadvantaged group. Finally, the court held that Greece was to pay 1,000 euros (EUR) to each of the applicant families in respect of non-pecuniary damage and EUR 2,000 to the applicants jointly in respect of costs and expenses.
